By the time they're finished, wi

How much punishment can a grass field take before it becomes unplayable?

How many fixtures will have been abandoned before it's back to normal?

Or, to put it more tangibly, have you any idea how many hours playing time per year the average grass pitch will give?

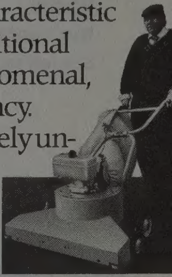
To take the tangible one first, the total is 110–120 hours.

This advertisement is about an alternative capable of at least 3000 without a trace of deterioration.

Its name is AstroTurf.®

Carry on playing.

AstroTurf, as you may know from its brilliant success at the Montreal Olympics, consists of nylon 'grass' adhered to shock-absorbent foam to soften falls, and, usually, laid at one degree slope fro the centre of the pitch for drainage.



It has every characteristic of grass except nutritional value, and has phenomenal, proven life expectancy.

It's almost entirely unaffected, of course, by heat or drought. Snow and ice you simply brush away.

Rain actually keeps it clean.

Maintenance is limited to hosi down and the occasional once over with a vacuum cleane

And at Islington, probab the best known British AstroTur installation, an average of 2500–3000 playing hours per year amounts to the equivalent of 22 years' use on conventional grass pitches, in just one.

Possibly of even greater interes any player familiar with it will tell the same be true of your pitch?

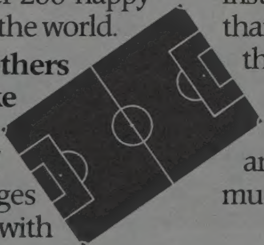
you not only that he performs better on AstroTurf than on grass, but that its far superior consistency means the fairest possible result.

And what else is sport but this?

Incidentally, AstroTurf is endorsed by FIH, and the IOC, not to mention over 200 happy clients throughout the world.

How to have others competing to make money for you.

Not the least of AstroTurf's advantages is that by treating it with special one-match (or even two-colour) paint, it can be transformed daily from hockey pitch to soccer or almost any other grass game surface.



The renting possibilities of this fact alone could mean a club well into the black on its investment in five years.

Which brings us to the crunch.

Financial aid.

In training pitch size AstroTurf need be no particular problem financially, as Ipswich Town FC would endorse.

But where a full-size installation is concerned, while more than justifiable on the grounds of the returns it will bring, the outlay can be considerable.

It is a familiar problem, however, and our whole operation is very much geared to helping overcome it.

So don't, please, let financial worry deter you from taking the possibility a stage further.

Get in touch with Monsanto Recreational Products Ltd., 10-18 Victoria St, London SW1 0NQ, Tel: 01-222 5678, and we'll send someone round to put you fully in the picture.

INSULATION

Cibco Insulations have brought to Britain a range of cellulose-fibre products which have proved their worth in the demanding North American market. Systems developed over 20 years to provide reliable thermal and sound insulation in factories, homes, commercial premises, sports stadia and a wide variety of buildings.

K13 A spray-on system for application to ceilings and interior walls, K13 offers excellent thermal and acoustic control. And it can be used in high-humidity buildings, such as swimming pools, to combat corrosion.

K19 A loose fill system, K19 is most efficient as a thermal insulation for attics in homes. It can be applied by hand or installed with specially-designed blowing machines. Compared to some other systems, K19 is odourless and non-irritating.

CELBAR A spray-on system, Celbar is designed as a sound absorber for application to partition walls in multi-family dwellings, offices, hotels and other buildings where noise control and privacy are essential. It is also a thermal insulation.

Manufactured in the UK under licence from the National Cellulose Corporation of America, the cellulose fibres in Cibco's systems are chemically treated to resist fire, mould and mildew.

MEET YOUR NEW PUMP ATTENDANT

Works 24 hours a day, 7 days a week, never has a holiday, and is never on strike. His name is Autofuel Fleetmeter and he is the answer to complete fuel control.

To Authorised personnel only he can supply Petrol, Derv, Gas Oil and Lubricating Oil and can also issue any or all of the following information: a print-out of each issue showing date, time, vehicle, mileage, fleet codes. This fully patented print-out has full Board of Trade Approval for invoicing to your customers. Add up these savings over your present system. The Autofuel system is used extensively by HAMPSHIRE County Council and many other councils as well as major fleet operators, Electricity Boards, Police Authorities and is currently proving its efficiency; security and cost savings are considerable. Don't take our word for it, come and see for yourself on an on-site demonstration, or if you need more information, write for our colour brochure. In 1974 the Municipal Group introduced to local government a most imaginative subscription scheme for Municipal Journal and Municipal Engineering.

The Service Fee Subscription Scheme, with its one order, one renewal date, one payment advantages, gives local authorities considerable financial savings but also allows members and principal officers to continue to have their own copies each week, posted individually to them no matter where they are situated.

Since the introduction of the scheme, the great majority of the Counties, Metropolitan Districts and larger District Councils have ordered the magazines on this basis and it has proved a most efficient method.

One of the lessons learnt from re-organisation in England was the importance of ensuring that all members, principal officers and their staffs were kept fully informed of what was happening not only in their own areas, but in local government generally. The Service Fee Subscription Scheme, apart from saving your authority money, was born to keep this objective alive.

There's more to Dictaphone than meets the ear.

It takes a lot more than just a good recorder and transcriber to make a really workable dictation system. It takes lots of experience.

A sound reason why Dictaphone has a broader range of equipment and systems than anyone else.

Start with the Dictaphone 100 – a pocket mini-cassette dictating machine that's ideal for anyone who has to think on the move. Dictate on it. Make personal notes, or even record a meeting. It weighs only 10½ ounces, fits in the pocket snugly and gives 30 minutes of recording on each cassette.

Going up the scale slightly, there's the Travel Master 220 – one of the smallest, full featured C-type cassette dictating machines in the world. Use it in the car. On the plane. Anywhere.

It offers fingertip controls, automatic recording levels, digital counter and electronic indexing. And it is totally compatible with Dictaphone's desktop transcription equipment.

The Thought Master 254 and 264 desktop machines offer crystal clear voice reproduction from standard cassettes, plus simple, easy-to-use controls. Length of memos, numbers of items, priorities and so on are indicated visibly and audibly.

A great boon to the busy executive and typist.

Whatever the need, Dictaphone systems are designed to make your workload lighter. As well they should, because we've dedicated the past 50 years to producing better, more effective dictation techniques and systems than anybody in the world. So we really should know what we're talking about.

Please send me more details on the new Dictaphone 100, 220, 264 and 254

CORRELATION INDEX AND GUIDE TO FORMER LOCAL AUTHORITIES

Reorganization of local government and local authorities has spread over a period of ten years or more, commencing in Greater London in 1965. This index seeks to guide the reader, still familiar with town names, to the change of names of local authorities into which former authorities in England, Wales and Scotland (see note (ii) below) have been absorbed. Old names of local authorities can be found in column 1 and the corresponding entry in column 2 directs the reader to the present title listed in the preceding index of local authorities.

Column 1 contains the names of all former local authorities, with the type of authority identified by the following letters:-

CC	County Council	U	Urban District Council
CB	County Borough	R	Rural District Council
MB	Metropolitan Borough (former London area)	SB	Scottish City or Burgh
B	Borough Council	SC	Scottish County Council

Column 2 contains present name of the district councils after reorganization, and particular types of new authorities (other than district councils in England) are noted by the letters:-

LB	London Borough	W	Welsh District
M	Metropolitan District	S	Scottish District

Column 3 contains names of the reorganized county or regional area. Particular types are noted by the letters:-

M	Metropolitan County (England)	SR	Scottish Region
SI	Scottish Islands Council

NOTES

(i) Some former authorities were absorbed into two or more new authorities in the several reorganizations, and are shown thus:-
Axbridge (Rural)—Sedgemoor/Mendip/Woodspring—Somerset/Avon.

(ii) This index is complete in relation to changes in England and Wales, but the changes in the former Scottish District Councils were too involved to compress into index form. Therefore, the correlation for Scotland, in this index, is restricted to former counties, cities and burghs.

EDITOR'S PREFACE
TO THE 82nd EDITION OF THE YEAR BOOK

As a well known Librarian remarked to me after the publication of the 1978 edition, the many annual Municipal Year Books form the history of local government from the 1880's from which time the local government law of the day was being consolidated in the Municipal Corporations Act of 1882 and the Local Government Act of 1888. The first edition of the Municipal Year Book was published in 1898, and its intoduction, entitled "Municipal Government in England", made specific reference to these two statutes. Two pages later the heading was "The Great Towns", . . . "The Great Towns of England and Wales, so-called by the Registrar-General, are 33 in number and include London . . ."

Has the picture of local government changed so very much, as today thirty-six District Councils, created in 1974, have Metropolitan status with wider powers than the other 333 District Councils in England and Wales. Thirty-three and thirty-six are such similar totals that an analysis of the former Great Towns can hardly be resisted. All but three still have an individual local government status; thirteen are Metropolitan District Councils, two more are London Boroughs, fourteen are District Councils and the City of London retains its unique position. Twelve of the original thirty-three had City status; all these have retained this honour and seven have gained it later even though today they are classified as District Councils.

This is all fascinating local government history, but the 1979 edition of the Municipal Year Book has little change in history to record. Last year reference was made to possible devolution legislation for Scotland and for Wales, and Acts for both countries are now on the Statute Book. Yet neither may become operational if the referendum to be held in each country fails to produce the necessary 40% majority.

The 1979 preface also made mention of the possibility of "a few larger new districts in England" returning to former county borough status. This is now known as "some organic change" in Ministerial circles, but such implementation is a matter for conjecture as the term of the present Government enters its final year. Then again if devolution comes to Wales, it is another matter for conjecture whether a new Welsh Assembly would reorganize the tiers of local government in Wales.

Nevertheless the Municipal Year Book has not stood still nor paused for reflection on the past. Changes in council membership and in political compositions are recorded following the May 1978 local elections for whole council membership in the London Boroughs and the English Metropolitan Districts. Elections were also held for Regional and Islands Councils in Scotland, and for a third of the council in some non-Metropolitan District Councils in England. Additional information appears in the Public Services Sections of the Year Book, especially for recreation, education, police and fire services, and for refuse or waste disposal. Attention has been given to providing space for the major professional associations in local government to record in the relevant section information on their history and progress.

Even though its value as a history book is unchallenged, its value year by year is as a local government directory and hence all its information must be as reliable as possible and comprehensive in each section. Thus one must acknowledge the immense help received from government departments, from local government and allied organizations and from the local authorities themselves throughout the United Kingdom in completing and answering all editorial enquiries. It is particularly noticeable that a large majority of these enquiries are answered with great promptitude, suggesting that local government does appreciate the importance of being correctly recorded in the Municipal Year Book.

Time is always vital in securing a good publication date, and happily the number of late replies is small. Many more authorities are constantly up-dating information without prompting. The editorial staff are grateful for such co-operation, and, in particular with this edition, thanks must be extended to the Society of County Treasurers and the London and the Scottish Branches of the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy for permission to publish financial tables prepared for their own members' use.

The support of Ministers of the Crown in contributing Prefaces and certain Reviews, and of leading officers in local government in writing further reviews is greatly appreciated, and adds much to the prestige attached to our own Municipal Year Book. Another edition is complete and another opportunity here arises to say many thanks to many people.

Accuracy is the keyword in the compilation of the Municipal Year Book and every care is taken to ensure this, but neither publisher nor printer can admit liability for any loss incurred through misprint or other circumstances.

PREFACE

by The Rt. Hon. PETER SHORE, MP
Secretary of State for the Environment

1. I am grateful to have the chance again to contribute a preface to the Municipal Year Book.

2. Since I wrote my preface last year the debate has continued on the relationship of central and local government, following the publication of the Government's Green Paper on Local Government Finance. Some people still urge a clear separation of the powers and duties of central and local government. Whatever the theoretical attractions of this I doubt if it is a practical propostition. While local authorities carry out functions under powers conferred on them and are responsible to their local electorates for what they do, Ministers nevertheless have overall responsibility to Parliament and must be able to match the aggregate of local authority spending to the Government's plans for the economy as a whole. It is because national and local interests interlock in this way that the Government advocates a flexible "middle way" of partnership between central and local government rather than a rigid and formal definition of their respective responsibilities.

3. The key to a successful partnership lies, in my view, in effective consultation and discussion at national, regional and local levels. The Consultative Council on Local Government Finance plays a crucial part at national level in discussing the general development of policies affecting local and central government. And we have now established a separate Housing Consultative Council to consider all major issues of joint concern to the Secretary of State for the Environment and local authorities in the carrying out of their housing responsibilities.

4. An important event in 1978 was the passing of the Inner Urban Areas Act. The theme of partnership is well illustrated by the establishment under this legislation of seven Inner City Partnerships bringing together representatives of central and local government to develop a co-ordinated strategy to tackle jointly the problems of inner city areas, and assist in their regeneration.

5. The system of Housing Strategies and Investment Programmes is another area where we are seeking to create a new and closer relationship with local government. Development of effective local housing strategies within the overall framework of national policy will undoubtedly continue to be a key to the success of our policies and, although it is bound to take some time for arrangements to mature, I am confident we have made a step in the right direction.

6. Finally, a word about the structure of local government. We live in a country which, although relatively small, is far from uniform: geography and history have combined to produce a rich diversity of conditions and needs. The structure of local government introduced in 1974 paid insufficient regard to this diversity and that is why the Government believe that certain limited "organic" changes should be made in the distribution of powers between counties and districts. The impact of these essentially pragmatic changes would be greatest in the larger non-metropolitan towns and cities which would then be better able to deal with their problems in their own way. Further consultations with local government will be necessary before legislation can be prepared; the precise extent of organic change and the programme for its implementation are thus matters which will be very much on the agenda for the future.

PREFACE

by The Rt. Hon. BRUCE MILLAN, MP
Secretary of State for Scotland

The Scotland Bill, which provides for a devolved Scottish Administration empowered to take all those decisions about government in Scotland which affect Scotland only, was approved by Parliament in the 1977/8 session. Its implementation depends on the referendum still to be held, but the Government are confident that the Scottish people will eagerly accept this opportunity to secure closer attention to Scottish problems by democratically elected representatives.

The Government's main economic object continues to be containing inflation and promoting industrial efficiency. In 1978 it was nevertheless possible to make a small increase in the resources available to local authorities subject to careful control of expenditure levels. I particularly welcomed the co-operation shown by authorities in discussion of the total provision to be made for their services and on means of keeping expenditure in line with the Government's planning figures.

The year saw the successful completion of property revaluation for rating purposes in all regions and islands areas and, as was to be expected after a 7-year interval since the previous revaluation, over a period of inflation, average increases in values were high. Overall, the domestic ratepayer benefited from revaluation at the expense of the other classes and I took steps to reduce the domestic element of rate support grant so releasing a substantial sum for the reduction of rate poundages generally. I decided also to continue industrial de-rating for a further 3 years at 50 per cent to maintain rates paid by industry in Scotland at a level comparable with that in England and Wales. Following a wide review of the arrangements for the rating of public utility undertakings, in co-operation with the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities and the undertakings concerned, I laid before Parliament orders proposing revised arrangements, effective from 1 April 1978, for electricity, gas, railway, and other undertakings.

In 1977 regional and islands councils had begun preparation of structure plans for their major strategic planning issues and the first, for Lothian Region, was submitted to me in May 1978. Detailed local planning is going ahead in most districts and some local plans have already been adopted. In the past year we have been following up the wide range of proposals contained in the Green Paper "Scottish Housing" (Cmnd 6852). In particular we enacted the Housing (Financial Provisions) (Scotland) Act 1978 which introduces an entirely new system of housing support grant for housing authorities to replace existing subsidies and extends and strengthens the statutory repair and improvement code. Most islands and district authorities have now produced creditable housing plans, given the difficulties involved in introducing the new system. In general, however, authorities recognise that they will require to make a more thorough examination of housing need and improve arrangements for forecasting and managing their spending programmes.

The past year has been very much a period of fundamental re-appraisal of the public education system in Scotland. From time to time in recent years there have been suggestions that Scottish Education merited some form of all-embracing inquiry of the kind that could be carried out by a Royal Commission or Advisory Council.

The Government took the view, however, that the varied problems of education should be tackled by means of separate enquiries. To this end a number of major committees were set up and their reports were submitted in 1977 and 1978. Two of the reports concentrated on the later years of schooling – the Munn Report on the Structure and Balance of the Curriculum in the Third and Fourth Years of Secondary School and the Dunning Report on Assessment and Certification in the Fourth Year. The Pack Report dealt with problems of truancy and indiscipline, and the Warnock Report with the education of handicapped children and young people. In addition my Department has published discussion papers on "School Accommodation in Scotland" and "Higher Education into the 1990's", both of which drew attention to the changing demographic pattern and to the complex problems with which both central and local Government will have to deal over the next decade. These various documents made a wide range of recommendations and their publication aroused very considerable interest. The debate on them provides the starting point for much re-thinking of policy for a long time to come. In the field of post-school education, the Government's proposals to establish Councils for Tertiary Education and Community Education have been widely welcomed. These Councils will provide a forum in which representatives of all the interests concerned can discuss problems affecting the future development of different parts of the post-school system and co-ordinate their efforts more effectively.

With financial assistance from my Department, a limited number of local authorities' social work departments have made good progress in the introduction of pilot schemes of community service for offenders. The Community Service by Offenders (Scotland) Act 1978 provides a statutory framework for the further development of these schemes throughout Scotland over the next few years.

PREFACE

by The Rt. Hon. JOHN MORRIS, QC, MP
Secretary of State for Wales

I am pleased once again to have the opportunity to contribute a Preface to the latest edition of the Municipal Year Book.

The past year has been one of considerable significance to the Welsh Office, because my responsibilities in Wales were extended first to include responsibilities for higher and further education and second to take on the former agriculture, fisheries and land drainage functions of the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. The effect is that I now have the same responsibility for these subjects in Wales that the Secretary of State for Scotland has in Scotland, and local authorities in Wales now look to me and to my office for guidance on the majority of their functions.

The past year also saw the passing of the Act which, if approved by the Welsh electorate in a referendum and put into effect by Parliament, would transfer most central government functions concerning Welsh local government services, to a directly elected Welsh Assembly. This will be an important advance in the democracy of Wales and the United Kingdom.

NICEIC
APPROVED CONTRACTOR
Roll of Approved Electrical Installation Contractors 1978-79

"Where do I find a qualified electrical contractor?"

The answer is in the Roll of Approved Electrical Installation Contractors. Published each year by the NICEIC, the consumer protection organisation, it lists the names and addresses of over 8000 approved contractors throughout the UK.

For a contractor to be listed in the Roll, he has to pass an extensive NICEIC examination of his work, equipment and premises. He also undertakes to work to the Wiring Regulations published by the Institution of Electrical Engineers. In addition he agrees to regular sample checks of his work by NICEIC Inspecting Engineers.

Approved Contractors are your assurance of a safe electrical installation.

Make sure you have your copy of the Roll. Copies are available from the National Inspection Council for Electrical Installation Contracting,

THE ROYAL INSTITUTE OF PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION

Director-General: (Post Vacant) Hamilton Hse., Mabledon Pl., London, WC1H 9BD (01-388 0211).

The Royal Institute of Public Administration, which was founded in 1922, is a company limited by guarantee, whose objects are to advance the study and to improve the practice of public administration. During the last 25 years it has been particularly active in carrying out work of special interest to local authorities. This it has done in a variety of ways.

The Institute has undertaken many major research projects on matters of vital interest to local authorities, which have resulted in authoritative books. More recently it has embarked on a series of short studies on administrative topics of current significance. In addition, over many years the Institute has published scholarly articles in its quarterly Journal, Public Administration, on some of the critical problems facing local government. It continues to provide seminars and conferences on key issues in local authority management and is able to assist authorities with the design of their internal training programmes.

A major feature has been the work of the Local Government Operational Research Unit which has helped to develop advanced administrative techniques for local authorities on a wide range of their services. The Unit's work has been concerned with policy formation as well as with the more efficient execution of well-established tasks. Since 1972 the Institute has been engaged in an extended research project on the development of computer-assisted school time-tabling and, as a result of this work, has provided local education authorities with a tool that can save effort in the time-tabling process and with a basic element necessary for the development of methods to improve resource utilization in the education service.

Other major elements in the Institute's work are an Operational Research Group working for the National Health Service and an Overseas Services Unit which provides consultancy and training services for countries in the developing world and for international organizations. It maintains Regional Groups in the main administrative centres of the UK, which arrange programmes of lectures, conferences and visits. It has a well-equipped library and an extensive bibliographical service available to member authorities.

THE INSTITUTE OF LOCAL GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATORS

Secretary: R. J. Ormond, IMA, MILGA, AMBIM, 127 Lexden Rd., Colchester, CO3 3RJ (0206 45212).

The Institute of Local Government Administrators was founded in 1958. It serves the professional interests of qualified administrative officers in the local government service.

The most important aims of the Institute are threefold:

1. To raise the standard of administrative and management practice in local government.
2. to promote the study of local government administration and management.
3. To improve the professional status of administrative officers in local government.

From its inception the Institute has been conscious that if the status of the qualified administrator is to be improved, it must encourage the systematic study of training in administration and management. Adequate career prospects must be ensured and the qualified administrator afforded equal recognition as a professional officer with his lawyer, accountant, engineer and architect colleagues.

A full member of the Institute must be 25 or over and satisfy the bye-laws on training and experience gained over four years in the local government service. He should also be employed in a senior administrative capacity. In addition the possession of a degree of a British University, or an appropriate administrative qualification is necessary. A suitable professional examination qualification may also be accepted.

Associate Membership is offered to officers who have obtained a recognized administrative qualification or who hold a degree of a British University. Student Membership is available to local government officers studying for a recognized administrative qualification.

Fellowships are awarded for outstanding service to the Institute or to local government.

In recent years ILGA, as the Institute is more usually known, has published several important reports aimed at defining the training required by administrators. Two 'Desk Topic' handbooks 'Relationships in the Office' and 'Recruitment Interviewing' have been published and a third is being prepared.

"The Role of the Secretary", a symposium of six articles on the experiences of secretaries since reorganisation has proved very popular. "Why Corporate Planning?" a collection of five articles has been available since May 1977.

Evidence has been submitted to the Maud and Mallaby Committees, to the Royal Commission on Local Government and to the Bains Working Group on Local Authority Management Structures. In addition the views of ILGA have been sought on the recommendations of the Prime Minister's Committee on Local Government Rules of Conduct and by the Layfield Committee on Local Government Finance.

Government Departments and other bodies consult the Institute because they recognize that it represents nearly 2,000 officers with special knowledge and experience.

THE LOCAL AUTHORITIES MANAGEMENT SERVICES AND COMPUTER COMMITTEE (LAMSAC)

Review by S. R. Barnes

Director: S. R. Barnes, 3 Buckingham Gate, London SW1E 6JH (01-828 2333)

LAMSAC, formed by the local authority associations to help and advise their members on the introduction and use of management sciences and computers, has now been in existence for ten years. That decade has seen many changes in the organization, with increases in the areas of advice given to authorities, with an extension in the fields in which we offer a consultancy service, and with the incorporation of two other central advisory units.

The first merger was with the London Boroughs' Management Services Unit in 1975. The LBMSU had provided in London a service similar to that provided by LAMSAC to all local authorities, and it was thus logical to concentrate in one organization the central advisory and consultancy functions on management services for local government.

In 1978 the local authority associations decided to strengthen the work of the Joint Advisory Committee on Local Authority Purchasing (JACLAP) by incorporating it within LAMSAC. It was felt that LAMSAC's organizational structure could give the purchasing advisory function stronger support than had been possible previously, and a new purchasing section was established within LAMSAC.

Panel structure

LAMSAC has four advisory Panels which, through working parties and applications groups, produce a number of guidance notes and study reports for local authorities. They are the Computer Panel, the O & M and Productivity Panel, the General Management Panel and the Purchasing Panel.

Advisory service

LAMSAC's Advisory Service aids local authorities in a variety of ways to suit individual needs and circumstances. The following are some of the most commonly used channels.

General Advice—We issue general guidelines and answer specific questions on all aspects of management, management services techniques, computing and purchasing in local government. Over fifty LAMSAC publications are currently in print, giving detailed advice in all these areas. We organise regular regional meetings for management services and personnel officers, for purchasing officers and for energy conservation officers, providing them with a forum to exchange ideas and information, to recommend research projects and to comment on LAMSAC initiatives.

Collection and dissemination of information—We collect information and data which can be of use to local authorities directly or which our officers can use in solving problems within authorities. We maintain a register of management services assignments containing details of investigations into most areas of local government work and we can put you in touch with officers in other authorities who have already tackled the problems you may be facing. In return we ask that you notify us of your assignments to help us update our information. We also keep an index of computer applications within authorities, with details of the computers used. In the work measurement field, we have details of performance standards for a wide range of tasks within local government environment.

Training—We provide training in the techniques of management and management services for officers at all levels of achievement and experience. We also offer appreciation training for elected members and chief officers, mainly in the application of computing to different services within local authorities (for example education, libraries, engineering). We study the training needs of management services and computing staff in local government and can recommend staff development programmes in these areas. We can also advise on training facilities available elsewhere if none exist within local government. In addition, we will devise and arrange training for selected groups within authorities on topics for which there is no other suitable training available, at the request of individual authorities.

Research and development—We investigate, appraise and develop new systems for local government, both in management and in computing. In order that the resultant systems may be of the fullest value we often carry out such research in conjunction with central government agencies so that we may benefit from and build on developments in areas outside local government. This co-operation has in the past produced management information systems for planning, for the police, for education, for housing and for authority-wide application. Research carried out by LAMSAC alone has produced guidelines on management services staffing and structures, on waste recovery, on the monitoring of incentive schemes and on staffing levels for libraries.

Comparative studies—In order to enable the transfer of best practices between authorities, we carry out comparative studies in the field of staffing levels so that authorities can adopt standards that are truly applicable to their circumstances and policies. Services for which work has so far been undertaken include housing, architecture, the non-teaching areas in aducation, planning and social services.

In the computing field, we have produced a series of performance profiles for different types of computer installations in different types of authorities to facilitate comparisons of performance and efficiency.

Consultancy service

The role of the consultancy service is to provide to local authorities services of a more detailed nature and over a longer time span than can be given through the advisory services. The type, range and depth of the service relate specifically to the requirements of the individual local authority.

The consultancy service is composed of officers with many years' management experience and has therefore practical knowledge of the difficulties which face authorities in their work. The consultants have the benefit of additional information from the research section and the working parties and where appropriate standard data acquired from past assignments.

Apart from the knowledge and experience available there are numerous reasons why a Council might find it desirable to employ the LAMSAC consultancy service, perhaps the most common being:

i) To take advantage of a specialised discipline on techniques not available from full time staff;
ii) To meet peak work loads;
iii) To obtain an unbiased view, uninfluenced by local factors and loyalties; and
iv) In small authorities to fulfill a function on a retainer basis when full time staffing is not justified.

The consultancy service has a background of solid achievement in all aspects of management and its attendant problems.

LAMSAC would be pleased to discuss with authorities these problems with a view to carrying out a preliminary survey. Requests should be submitted to the Director or any of the LAMSAC advisory officers.

Further information

LAMSAC News, published quarterly and available free of charge on request, gives details of current developments in all areas of LAmSAC's work. For copies, or for information on any other aspects of LAMSAC's activities, write to S. R. Barnes, Director.

THE LOCAL GOVERNMENT OPERATIONAL RESEARCH UNIT of the Royal Institute of Public Administration

Director: Brian Whitworth,'BA, 201 King's Rd.; Reading, RG1 4LH (0734 661234)

As its name implies, the Local Government Operational Research Unit uses operational research methods to solve problems in local government. Operational Research is a systematic and rational approach to decision making in management and policy formulation. It proceeds by expressing problems in quantitative terms and using analytic methods to evaluate the alternative solutions.

In the thirteen years since it was set up, the Unit has established itself as a valued advisor to local authorities throughout the United Kingdom. It has offices in Reading and Manchester, the former housing Southern Group, and the latter housing Northern Group.

The Unit is supported by the subscriptions of its member authorities—currently well over half of the "most purpose" authorities are in membership—and by a proportionate grant from the Department of the Environment. These enable the Unit to carry out a research programme independent of specifically negotiated projects for local authorities. Research projects for individual authorities are normally undertaken under contract, with more favourable terms available for projects of general interest to local authorities or of a pioneering or developmental character. The contract research programme is primarily determined by the demands of local authorities, although appropriate central government departments often assist in such projects. The content of the non-contract research programme is decided by the Unit's Board, whose members are representative of the local authority associations. Additional suggestions for such research are always welcomed.

In the course of studies for authorities in all parts of the country the Unit has built up considerable expertise in a number of areas. Methods developed and applied by the Unit include land-use planning procedures, housing survey, analysis, and allocation procedures, refuse disposal planning, and a wide variety of transportation planning techniques from road and traffic evaluation to bus scheduling.

Local Government Studies

Some recently completed studies for local authorities are:

- School Transport—studies for four county councils using the Unit's newly-developed school bus scheduling suite of computer programmes.
- Vehicle Management—studies for a non-metropolitan district and a non-metropolitan county. In the former, the Unit established the costs of alternative depot arrangements for the district. The latter study was a broad review of transport operations throughout the county to pinpoint potential cost savings.
- Housing—studies for a metropolitan district and a London borough to develop housing points schemes. The schemes, which are now in operation, accurately reflect the Council's judgement of relative housing need and help to ensure that the housing stock is utilized to its best effect.

Central Government Studies

The Unit's work for central government has covered a wide range of topics. Studies for central government have been conducted exclusively in areas of concern to local authorities. Current examples of these are:

- For the Department of Transport, the Unit carried out an intensive study on methods of estimating total annual traffic flow on inter-urban roads. As a result of this work, it is expected that the Department of Transport will make changes in COBA to incorporate the Unit's findings. The results of this study formed part of the Unit's evidence to the Advisory Committee on Trunk Road Assessment. The Unit was invited by the Committee to give both written and oral evidence.
- A study for the Department of the Environment with the aim of producing a directory to the data holdings within a local authority. This study follows an earlier work for the DoE to establish in broad terms the data held by local authorities and to investigate the practicability of producing such a directory.

Research Studies

The Unit has financed many studies on topics of general interest to local authorities. A recent study on vehicle fleet management has resulted from the Unit's association with IUTEP, the International Urban Technology Exchange Program. IUTEP is a new international organization formed to promote the interchange of ideas and methods between research bodies working for local government and other public authorities. The unit has obtained from Public Technology Inc., the US partner in IUTEP, a suite of computer programs designed to improve the management of large fleets of vehicles. The aim of the current research is to examine the relevance of the fleet management package to UK authorities.

Services to Local Authorities

The Unit offers a comprehensive range of services to local authorities, some of which are free to member authorities. The services at present available are:

- The problem-solving and advice service. Local authority officers who have a problem with which the Unit can help are invited to get in touch by letter or by phone. The Unit may be able to help immediately, or may undertake to do the work necessary to solve the problem. A reasonable amount of work will be done at no charge to members.
- The survey and statistical advice service. This service enables authorities to call on the Unit's considerable expertise in survey design and analysis, and in statistics. Again, a reasonable amount of advice is given free to members.
- The consultancy service. This is open to all local authorities and to central government, and is available for research on a contract basis.
- The research service. This is the service that particularly distinguishes the Unit from other organizations working in the local government sphere. The Unit uses its research fund to undertake studies of wide general interest to local authorities, and aims to be responsive to local authority needs. The Unit welcomes suggestions for research in this category.
- Publications. A range of publications is available covering most aspects of local government responsibility. Publications are free to member authorities.

Details of current and recently completed projects are published annually in the Information Bulletin, which is freely available from the Publications Officer at either of the addresses below.

MANAGEMENT SERVICES IN LOCAL GOVERNMENT

Review by R. S. SCULLARD, FWSOM

Public Relations Officer, Local Government and Water Services Specialist Group, Institute of Practitioners in Work Study, Organisation and Methods. (IWSOM)

Management Services

One recommendation of the Bains report on the management and structure of the new local authorities was the withdrawal of work study resources from the control of departments and the creation of centralised management services units comprising work study and O & M, controlled by the Chief Executive, administrator or, more frequently, linked with the personnel function. The recommendation was particularly enlightened as it came at a time when two professional bodies, the Institute of Work Study Practitioners and the Organisation and Methods Society, combined to form the IWSOM. Work study is defined as "the study of human work in all its contexts" which clearly includes office work. O & M is not only concerned with office machinery but embraces organisation structures. The combination of the two disciplines has produced management services units in local authorities which are a most valuable problem solving resource which is particularly effective in increasing overall productivity. Local authorities are now faced with the challenge of how to make fullest use of their management services.

Evaluating the use of Management Services

Productivity can be defined as the ratio between input, people, buildings, equipment, money; and output, services to the public. Local authorities can measure the use they are making of their management services units by observing the contribution their unit is making to productivity in its widest sense.

The overall productivity of the authority is low if the right things are not being done, or if the wrong priority is being given to projects—are management services contributing their time, training and their special position of being detached from departmental pressures to the formation of the corporate plan? Are the right things being done in the best way—are management services confined to refuse collection methods or are they assisting to evaluate fostering against residential care, or carrying out a full cost benefit analysis of contract and direct labour? Are management services assisting to define criteria against which the effectiveness of operations and management can be measured; an area of particular importance in times of financial stringency? Do they lead or contribute to the authority's cost reduction programme? Are organisation structures appropriate and manning levels correct, and are management services looking at both staff and manual employee areas? Finally, if a problem arises even in professional areas, are management services used in an information gathering and presenting role? If the answers to these questions are negative, the authority is not making the best use of a valuable and expensive resource which is unique in the authority in that its officers are not absorbed in daily managerial duties, report centrally, and are not dedicated to the advancement of a programme area policy.

Evaluating the Management Services Unit

The authority will only make full use of the management services unit if the unit is capable of meeting demands made upon it. This will depend to a great extent upon the capability and attitude of the Management Services Officer. Is he seen to be the authority's adviser on management and productivity? Has he the confidence of the Chief Officers and has he established the client/consultant relationship which enables the best management services work to be done, or is he seen as restrictive and unhelpful? Is he so closely involved with the personnel function that he has taken over the role of "establishment man" and disqualified himself in the eyes of departmental management and trade unions from providing an unbiased view? Conversely, is he so concerned with his reputation as an "honest broker" that he is oblivious of his environment and produces impractical solutions to real problems? Does he see such a wide gap between work study and O & M that he organises them into permanent separate sections and is, therefore, unable to make best use of the approach and skills common to all his officers in solving problems which arise in the authority? Does he rely upon the quality of the work produced in his unit and the positive attitude of his officers as the best possible advertisement for his services, and can he market these services to Chief Officers? Finally, does he insist upon the highest standard of professional conduct and require his officers to become corporate members of the IWSOM, which is the appropriate professional body for management services.

Problems of Organisation in Authorities

Local authority management structures were designed at a time when major pressures were being placed on society and the environment by continuing industrial growth. Bigger authorities, large enough to sustain corporate management systems and research and evaluation teams, were set up to combat big problems. Shortly after re-organisation, local authorities were faced with new problems arising from severe financial restrictions. The corporate management systems, with their important function of setting priorities for the authority as a whole, which were set up to combat problems of growth are equally effectively structured to solve the problems of how to meet growing demands with the same or less resources—in short, improving productivity. The manpower watch effectively monitors increases in staffing levels and, because personnel is a centralised function, any changes in levels are scrutinised against corporate priorities. Three years of increasing demands for services with severe restrictions on manpower growth have effectively improved overall productivity in local authorities and have changed attitudes towards the use of manpower. Whereas, previously, increased demands for services was met by an automatic response for increased resources, departments are now considering how best to redistribute existing resources to meet changes in the pressure falling upon them. This creates the opportunity to use management services as a consultancy service providing solutions to manpower distribution problems within individual departments.

A negative effect of the need to control manpower growth has been the restriction on departmental reviews. Changes in circumstances and pressures induce the need to make changes in organisations. Genuine growth of individual capabilities and of organisations is healthy, necessary, and desirable, and it is a major criticism of local authorities that their structures and highly developed grading and payment systems seriously inhibit their ability to cope with such growth even in normal circumstances. After a long period of restriction, management services must be prepared to assist Chief Officers to restructure their departments if the benefits which have resulted from the deeper appreciation of the value of manpower are not to be lost. It is of vital importance that any relaxation of the current restrictions leads to properly controlled adjustments to meet the changed needs of the organisation, rather than a general distribution of improved grades which may meet pressures from individuals but which will not improve the operational efficiency of the authority.

Bonus Payments

The 1978 manual employee pay award accepted the government's advice which allowed for the introduction of new bonus payment schemes if they can be shown to be self-financing. By not including a £5 supplement in the basic wage used for bonus calculation purposes, the award continued to attempt to mitigate the effect of problems which face local authorities in making payments to manual employees. Partly as a result of the interest in work study productivity schemes which followed the publication of the National Board for Prices and Incomes report No. 29 in 1967, employees have been divided into two groups, a group where bonus schemes can be introduced and a group carrying out work where it is difficult to introduce a scheme. As the basic wages from which bonus percentages are calculated have risen, the gap between the gross earnings of bonus earners and non-bonus earners has widened. As a result, in some cases, the rewards for labour depends upon the type of work done rather than upon the productivity of the employee. The question of how to devise a bonus scheme for employees who are already highly productive is nationwide and the problem of different gross earnings between the two groups of workers in local government reflects a situation which exists between whole industries with traditionally different levels of worker productivity. It may be that the long term solution is the erosion of the differences in conditions of service between staff and manual employees and this could be an area in which local authorities could make an important contribution.

The pause in the extension of bonus schemes has provided an opportinity for a number of interested working groups to appraise the role of work study in local authories. Some important conclusions were:

1. It is important to use work study resources to provide information for management, particularly definition of the task, manning standards and performance standards.

2. Control systems are an essential and valuable part of every scheme and there is a need for better training of managers and supervisors in the provision and use of management information.
3. Management services should formally audit its own bonus schemes and should combine with financial audit teams to audit the use of manpower by the authority.
4. Management services should set manpower efficiency targets and monitor progress towards these targets. Information provided by monitoring should be used to counteract statements about manpower waste in local government.

These conclusions highlight the need for the combination of O & M and work study into the management services approach to improved productivity. For example, it is inappropriate to devise a new bonus scheme or review an existing scheme without:

1. Examining the objectives of the authority to discover if the work to be done contributes to objectives and how important it is.
2. Broad critical examination of the results of the work to find if they can be achieved in another way. Detailed critical examination to find the optimum detailed method.
3. Measurement of the work load and setting appropriate staffing levels and payment system.
4. Examining the management and supervisory structure under which the work will be carried out.
5. Setting up a control system to provide management information.

Conclusions

Local authorities provide an ideal environment for the practice of the management services function as they are large enough to provide a full range of problems and to sustain a management services team which combines work study and O & M. The best use will be made of this resource when the authority requires much of its team, and the Management Services Officer responds by creating a client/Consultant relationship with Chief Officers, demanding the highest possible standards from his unit and by adopting a problem solving approach which makes full use of the capabilities of all his officers. In these ways, management services will be used to its best advantage, assisting authorities to increase their productivity to meet increased demands.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT TRAINING BOARD

Review by D. LOFTS, MA, DPA, Director

The national and local authority setting within which the Local Government Training Board must operate has changed radically since the Board was set up in 1967. The continuing expansion of the role of Manpower Services Commission, the reorganization of local government, the switch from a levy/grant system of Board funding to a direct but lower level of rate support grant financing, and the unprecedented pressures on local authority resources are among the factors which have influenced the work of the Board. One result of these developments has been to increase consistently the demands on the Board; it seems inevitable that this will continue even though current demands are already greater than can be met with the resources available. Last year, after ten years of operations, it was agreed to be an opportune time to review the organisation's objectives, achievements and activities. These are monitored continuously as part of the normal management process but it was thought that the involvement of Board members and working groups of staff at all levels would be invaluable in ensuring that the Board's aims were translated into realistic and effective action as efficiently as possible.

The ten year review is a major exercise and, at the time of writing, it is impossible to forecast fully the extent of its effects. One important outcome has been the acceptance by the Board of a restatement of the LGTB's aims in the light of the current environment in which it operates. In addition, Board staff are working in conjunction with local authority and provincial councils' officers to develop an information and consultation system which will be designed to find out the views of local authorities so that they can influence the Board's work programme and, as a result, to make more effective the service which the Board and the provincial councils' training officers have been providing for authorities.

These two initiatives will enable the Board's committees to determine policies and allocate resources on a more firmly-based set of priorities. This rationalisation of objectives and more systematic approach to obtaining and interpreting regular information from the whole range of authorities has become necessary not only because of the increased complexity of pressures on the Board's limited resources—including staff— but also because of the inevitable changing membership of the Board and its committees and the need, therefore, for a more precise definition of what the LGTB is aiming to do so that competing demands can best be assessed. The overall aim of the Board has been redrafted as:

To influence local authorities in England and Wales and all the other bodies concerned with, or having an impact on, the training of local government employees to ensure that training of the required standard and quantity is provided for employees in each category so that the requirements for trained manpower by the local government service are met in both the short and long term.

This basic statement takes account of the fact that local government's training and, indeed, its training needs are often determined by institutions and individuals outside the service; it also acknowledges that with the passing of the system of voluntary levy and a wide ranging grants scheme the Board is no longer able to influence the redistribution of training costs on an equitable basis between authorities.

To meet this general objective the Board accepted that specific aims must be pursued. These are to:

1. ascertain and represent the views and interests of local government and ensure that these are taken into account by all bodies affecting training in local government when they are formulating policy, making plans or taking action;
2. act as a source of professional training advice and, where appropriate, assistance to all bodies concerned with the training and examining of local government employees;
3. utilise the available expertise, facilities, finances and other resources of all relevant bodies for the benefit of the training of local government employees;
4. initiate, promote, encourage and evaluate experiments and new developments in training and other fields related to training in local government;
5. utilise available manpower information and supplement it where necessary, in order to help local authorities assess future training levels; to disseminate this and other information relevant to training in local government;
6. provide, and monitor the effectiveness of, a range of services to assist local authorities (and other bodies) to implement training for local government employees. These include setting and recommending training standards and systems of assessment; fulfilling the role of an examining and professional qualifying body for groups of staff; issuing training recommendations and other material based on analytical studies and research; giving advice and assistance in support of published recommendations and training material; ensuring the provision of a range of suitable off-the-job training, normally through the public education system; and providing financial assistance to encourage the training of specific categories of staff.

While it is not suggested that all these specific aims can be followed simultaneously with current resources, they provide a basis to which any proposed activity can be related. Working groups of Board officers have reviewed aspects of the organisation's internal systems and procedures to ensure that LGTB services and materials are provided as efficiently as possible and are as effective as possible. With a professional advisory staff of only 40 officers and a rate support grant income which was reduced to £1,564,000 for 1978–79 it is essential these criteria be constantly in mind.

It will take a little time before the full benefits of the review are apparent. They should, however, help local government achieve maximum benefit from all of its valuable training resources—in individual local authorities, in the provincial councils and at the Board, to utilise fully the considerable expertise which has been developed during the past decade.

THE INSTITUTE OF PERSONNEL MANAGEMENT

Director: Bernard Dixon, Central Hse., Upper Woburn Pl., London, WC1H 0HX (01-387 2844).

The Institute of Personnel Management, founded in 1913, is the professional personnel management organization in Great Britain. It has, as its prime objective, the development of professional knowledge and competence in personnel management and the Institute works with educational bodies to ensure high standards of qualification and training.

IPM's rapidly expanding membership of over 18,000 includes qualified practising personnel, industrial relations, training and salary administration managers and a growing number of student members.

The contribution the IPM makes nationally to industry and commerce is recognized by the increasing assistance it is asked to give to Government and other bodies such as the Department of Employment, the Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service, the Manpower Services Commission, the Equal Opportunities Commission, the Training Services Agency and the European Economic Community.

In addition to providing a library and information service, the IPM publishes a wide range of management books and surveys and runs a comprehensive programme of courses, seminars and conferences. The Institute has links with institutes in other parts of the world and is a founder member of the European Association for Personnel Management, which is a member of the World Federation of Personnel Management Associations.

INSTITUTE OF PRACTITIONERS IN WORK STUDY, ORGANISATION AND METHODS

Director and General Secretary: Edward A. King, 1 Cecil Ct., London Rd., Enfield, Middx., EN2 6DD (01-363 7452).

The Institute of Practitioners in Work Study, Organisation and Methods (IWSOM) has 21,000 members and is probably the world's largest professional body concerned with productivity.

It was formed in January 1975, with HRH The Duke of Edinburgh as first president, as the result of a merger between the Institute of Work Study Practitioners and the Organisation & Methods Society. Through earlier mergers the IWSP could trace its history back to 1941 when the first British professional association for work study practitioners was formed. The O & M Society came into being in 1962.

The Institute is the professional and qualifying body for men and women practising work study, organisation and methods, and other disciplines in the management services field.

The principal objectives of the Insitute are to create professional standards for the practice of work study, organisation and methods, and allied disciplines, and to provide a system of qualifying examinations. It also encourages research and development and collaborates with professional associations in similar fields.

Membership can be in either of two divisions: corporate and non-corporate. Corporate members are full members who are entitled to vote at general meetings and to use designatory letters after their name—MWSOM for a Member, FWSOM for a Fellow. The non-corporate grades are Affiliate, Licentiate and Graduate.

Corporate membership is normally by examination although there are alternative means of entry for graduates and for other highly qualified and experienced men and women. Some 100 colleges throughout the country run courses for the Institute's examination —the Management Services Certificate, which has a work study or organistion and method option, and the Management Services Diploma. Study can also be done privately or by correspondence tuition.

The Institute has its own journal, Management Services, which is issued free to members each month. There is a wide range of services for members, including a library and a technical information service.

Foreword by The Rt. Hon. JOHN SILKIN, MP
Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food

As the Minister responsible for land drainage and flood protection I should like to take this opportunity to comment on some aspects of the tidal floods which caused so much damage in the North West in November 1977 and on the East Coast and Kent in January 1978.

I do not think there is any doubt that the damage on the East Coast would have been much more severe if the defences had not been improved over the years following the 1953 disaster. In some places tide levels were higher than in 1953 but the defences were nevertheless good enough to withstand them. This demonstrates that investment in bringing sea defences to an adequate standard is money well spent. It also points to the need for constant vigilance by the water authorities and others responsible for sea defences to ensure that defences are not only properly maintained, but are reviewed from time to time to see whether the standard is adequate to protect more recent developments.

It may not be fully realized that in deciding what standard of protection should be provided on various stretches of the coastline water authorities normally take into account the value of the land and property which is at risk. A housing estate or large industrial development will obviously justify a high standard of protection but in cost/benefit terms grazing or poor quality agricultural land can often justify only a lower standard. It follows that if, at a later stage, development takes place on this poorer quality land the defences should be improved. But this will not be done unless there is close liaison between the planning authority and the water authority. There were one or two instances in the 1977/78 floods which seemed to show that this liaison had not operated effectively.

Another aspect of last winter's flood which caused some concern was the operation of flood warning systems. Along the East Coast in general the system worked well, but there were some failures and some criticism of the authorities concerned that the emergency arrangements following the issue of a public warning did not operate satisfactorily. The lesson to be learned here is the need for warning systems and emergency plans to be kept under review and so far as possible tested from time to time. There is always a risk that once an emergency plan has been devised and written up in a handbook of procedures it will be forgotten until the first time it is needed. I think we must recognize that however much money is invested in flood defences flooding will remain a constant—if infrequent—risk in many parts of the country. Let us be sure that we are ready to cope with it when it comes.

John Silkin

Under the provisions of Section 19 of the Agricultural Marketing Act 1958, the appropriate Minister or Ministers are required to appoint Consumers' Committees and Committees of Investigation for England and Wales, for Scotland and for Great Britain.

The Committees were originally appointed in 1933 but did not function from 1939 to 1953 when the majority of schemes were suspended or modified under Defence Regulations.

Marketing Schemes are in operation for Hops (England), Wool (United Kingdom), Potatoes (Great Britain), and Milk (one scheme for England and Wales and three for Scotland).

The duty of a Consumers' Committee is to consider and report to the Minister on:

(1) the effect of any scheme approved by the Minister, which is for the time being in force, on consumers of the regulated product; and

(2) any complaints made to the Committee as to the effect of any such scheme on consumers of the regulated product.

The Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Secretary of State for Wales, acting jointly, have appointed the Consumers' Committee for England and Wales as follows:

Chairman: Dr. J. R. Cockroft, OBE, MB, ChB; E. J. Bovill; Mrs. J. R. E. Evans, OBE; M. Myers, MA (Cantab); T. A. Owen, MA (Oxon); Mrs. R. E. Roberts, MBE; J. M. Wood, OBE.

(i) any report made by a Consumers' Committee appointed under Section 19 of the Agricultural Marketing Act 1958,

(ii) any complaint made to the Minister as to the operation of a marketing scheme which, in the opinion of the Minister, could not be considered by a Consumers' Committee, or

(iii) any question referred by the Minister under the provisions of Section 20 (3) of the Agricultural Marketing Act 1958, which deals with directions that may be given by the Minister to marketing boards.

The Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, and the Secretary of State for Wales, acting jointly, have appointed the Committee of Investigation for England and Wales as follows: Chairman (Vacant); Sir G. A. H. Cadbury, MA(Econ); L. P. Foldes, BCom, MSc(Econ); A. Forman, OBE; D. G. Richards, FCA; D. Elystan-Morgan, LLB.

The Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food the Secretary of State for Scotland and the Secretary of State for Wales, acting jointly, have appointed the same Committee to act as the Committee of Investigation for Great Britain. In addition G. E. Cameron, CBE, FCA has been appointed as a member of the Great Britain Committee to act on those occasions when the Committee is considering schemes applicable to Northern Ireland or any part of Northern Ireland (Section 53 (5), AMA 1958).

COUNTY SMALL HOLDINGS, ENGLAND AND WALES

The following statistical information on Small Holdings has been received from the County Councils and the Greater London Council. The management of this service is now undertaken in accordance with the provisions of the Agricultural Act, 1970, which particularly sought to re-organise the holdings in each county area into larger units to provide more intensive farming.

There are holdings in each of the 53 counties in England and Wales, including the six Metropolitan Counties in England, and the Greater London Council. Detailed information is collected annually by the County Treasurer's Society and published in the County Councils Gazette.

The information collected indicates that the number of small holdings has been falling, and the trend is certainly towards fewer but larger holdings in accordance with the aim of the 1970 Act.

(Note: The name of the Agricultural Analyst is given below, where a separate appointment has been made.)

(M) indicates Metropolitan County.

LOCAL AUTHORITY ARCHITECTURE

Review by GEOFFREY J FOXLEY, DipArch, FRIBA, DipTP
Director of Development & Technical Services, London Borough of Harrow

1. In my last Review I concentrated upon later post Local Government re-organization, the difficulties continuing to be experienced by the construction industry and residential layouts since which the DOE Circular 32/77 has been published.

2. The past year has seen a continuance of post re-organization change in favour of Local Authority and departmental structures, and the plight of the construction industry is, alas, continuing.

3. However, two major issues have shown themselves during the past year past both vitally concerned with housing.

4. About the middle of 1977 the Government published its Consultative Green Paper 'Housing Policy', and at about the same time the Society of Chief Architects of Local Authorities decided to make a comparison of housing standards; not only between Parker Morris and the National House Building Council but to compare space standards from the Tudor Walters Standards of 1919 through 1923, 1944, 1949, 1952, 1953, 1961, 1976. SCALA also looked at comparisons with other European countries and space and design relative to children at play.

5. Both considerations are worthy of comment and amplification in this Review.

Housing Policy

6. The views of the Association of Municipal Authorities are important seeing that it represents all 77 Metropolitan local authorities in England who serve the predominantly urban communities in which some nineteen million people live. They provide all local government services in those areas and between them are responsible for the housing function in the country's major conurbation. The AMA's membership also comprises the town planning authorities responsible for structure and Local Plans affecting the scale and pattern of development of those areas.

7. A major disappointment of the AMA is to find no radical reform of housing finance.

8. The AMA would cogently argue that there are important strategic issues not tackled in the Government's Green Paper, central to these is the nature of the housing subsidy system in the sense of the form in which financial help is given both to owner-occupiers and to local authorities. A criticism of the Green Paper is that it accepts the present basic structure of Public Support for housing without major changes in both the public and private sectors. The consequences of this basic acceptance of the present system lead to four arguable points of criticism. They are:

8.1. The substantial reduction in local authority capital expenditure on housing.

8.2. A continuing degree of help for owner-occupiers which is not sufficiently graded according to the owner-occupiers ability to pay.

8.3. Undue detailed regulation by central government of local government housing activity.

8.4. The absence of any fundamental change in the housing subsidy system designed to relate the subsidy according to the need of the people for whom houses are being provided.

9. The need to encourage owner-occupation is there: but the fact that the Government's assistance to owner-occupiers chiefly takes the form of tax relief, and as such does not appear as a quantified amount of public expenditure, is no reason for not regarding it like direct expenditure by local authorities on housing as a demand on resources. The application of this relief ought to be subjected to the same scrutiny of need as is applied to direct expenditure on housing. This prompts two points where a further review is required of the Government's proposals.

9.1. While general tax relief at the basic rate of tax should continue for all mortgage interest payments by owner-occupiers, it is questionable whether this tax relief should extend to higher rates of tax as it does now. By definition the higher the rate of tax paid by the owner-occupier the greater the element of subsidy in granting tax relief on mortgage interest payments. It is difficult to see how this meets a definition of 'need'. It is argued that it must contribute to raising the price of houses in the middle to higher range of properties which in turn must influence prices in the rest of the private sector housing market.

9.2. If inflation of house prices continues, and if rates of interest remain high by historical standards, then the owner-occupier with a mortgage is in an increasingly better position from year to year, particularly if his earnings are increasing. People in most need are first time buyers and those on low incomes. But it is particularly those cases of need who have most difficulty in being helped through the existing mortgage system. They are likely to be the cases either as borrowers themselves or in the type of property they wish to buy which the Building Societies are least willing to take on. It is discrimination in favour of help to this type of need which should have high priority and this cannot be easily achieved without local authority action. This leads naturally to a second aspect of major criticism which deals with the distribution of public sector expenditure between different types of housing expenditure.

10. Evidence in the Green Paper tells a story of a mounting proportion of the resources of public sector housing going to general financial support through subsidies rather than into direct provision for housing through new house building, or private sector house building for those in need helped by finance through local government mortgages.

11. Not only has the provision of new houses fallen well back from its high point in 1974/75 but mortgage lending has fallen to less than the volume of repayments. The contrast with the growth in subsidies is most marked. This is further demonstrated when a comparison is made of Exchequer subsidies including rent rebates as a percentage of the local authority housing revenue account expenditure. The evidence here suggests a steadily growing percentage from a figure of near 20% in 1970/71 to over 40% in 1975/76.

12. There is also a general comment that the proposals contained in the Green Paper could lead to a greater control by the Government of local authority housing schemes.

13. Having been critical, we can now turn to many of the other Recommendations in the Green Paper which can be supported or supported with reservations.

14. If the housing surveys which are proposed are broadly comparable with census material the information is much needed and will be useful to local authorities.

15. The proposal to set up a DOE Housing Unit is unclear. If it is a body which will be undertaking new work the greatest benefits will be gained by close co-operation with local authorities and their Associations. It is essential that any new body should be comprehensive in its coverage so as to act as the focal point for all housing activities within the DOE.

16. On the question of Local Housing Strategies where there are conflicts about the strategy, the deciding factor should be with the local authority who are closest to and elected by the local people most attuned to local needs.

17. The proposal to set up a Housing Consultative Council is welcomed and one of its first tasks should be to investigate the possible organisation of such consultation.

18. If low-start mortgages to younger persons are to be encouraged there must be some relaxation of the rules to increase the period of advances. Building Societies are generally most reluctant to make loans for periods longer than 25 years.

19. There is practically universal argument that there should be a simpler method of cost control of local authority house-building. To replace the present housing cost yardstick, the yardstick, though meant to protect the Government's subsidy liability, has proved to be one of the main factors in delaying and creating inflexibility in housing construction. It wastes money by lengthening the procedures and duplicating staff resources at national and local level for its operation. Despite its existence, standards are still uneven across the country. Local Authorities and their Officers should take full responsibility for the costs and standards of their own projects without such external constraints and should answer direct to the ratepayers for their decisions on these matters.

20. Local Authorities in carrying out their housing and planning functions should ensure that a wide range of housing requirements are met in the context of the development of local housing strategies. However, many authorities have tended to concentrate on priority needs such as for aged persons and families as well as re-housing from unfit dwellings. Generally the needs of married couples without children (other than OAPs) and single working persons have been accorded low, if any, priority and consequently have had little influence on the planning of house types in building programmes and have not been included in categories for house lending.

21. It is important that there should be in depth discussions between the DOE and the local authority association on public sector housing standards. There must be no lowering of standards and there should be regular reviews of standards required. This subject will be further commented upon later in this Review.

22. The change of emphasis in renovation policy appears an over simplification of what is a wider based and more complex problem. The intention to prevent houses becoming unfit as a result of being allowed to fall into disrepair is commendable, but it should not be seen in complete isolation. It must be recognised that a broad spread of action covering both the worst and rather better property is necessary to prevent the latter. Additionally, there must be many local authorities with a significant stock of older dwellings with a high level of under-occupation at very low densities, lacking in basic facilities where in terms of finance only the spending of large sums of money on maintenance or renovation are in the longer term more advisedly spent on building new dwellings which meet the needs in terms of type and scale of the local community. Some scepticism must be expressed as to the real value of a sophisticated discounted cash-flow appraisal, the apparent objectivity of which may be dangerously deceptive. The real problem lies not in carrying out a comparison of alternatives but in making the right choice between these alternatives.

Housing Standards

General Introduction

23. Increasingly over the past few years comparisons have been made between speculatively built housing for the private market and Local Authority housing. During 1977 the Society of Chief Architects of Local Authorities Housing Committee considered British and European Standards, compared Parker Morris and related mandatory standards and space and design for Children's Play Spaces.

24. Generally it has been claimed that council houses, built to 'Parker Morris' standards are unnecessarily bigger and better equipped than they need to be and are therefore unnecessarily expensive to build. The Society believes that many statements made are poorly founded, that any revision of standards should begin with an examination of factual information, and that comparison must be between types of accommodation designed for a specific number of people; bed spaces not bedrooms.

25. The standards of the National House Building Council applicable to the private sector has been examined and compared with those of the Department of the Environment—the 'Parker Morris' standards of 1961. This report covers all aspects of comparison (plan arrangements, spaces, fittings and space heating, furniture and play space).

26. The report shows that the National House Building Council standards are largely concerned with the details of construction, fittings and equipment and so are complementary to the standards of space set by Parker Morris rather than being directly comparable.

27. SCALA firmly believes that any new design standards for housing should embrace both sets of rules. The history of municipal housing shows that space standards have fluctuated on at least two occasions since the first World War for reasons other than consideration of comfort and convenience. Thus the Tudor Walters standards of 1919 were reduced in 1923 because of high costs of housing completions in the face of diminishing availability of materials and labour. The Parker Morris Report sought to re-establish space standards determined by the reasonable life style of the intended occupiers. Believing the design criteria to have been well conceived SCALA has examined for comparison the space standards propounded by the then Ministry of Housing and Local Government over the years 1944 to 1953 and finds that the Parker Morris Standards, far from being singularly excessive, are generally a little lower than those of 1949.

28. Accordingly, SCALA believes that any alteration of space requirements should be based on a review of housing built to these varying standards in which their adequacy can be objectively appraised.

29. The adequacy of heating standards which have remained unchanged since 1949 except in housing for elderly people is challenged and it is urged whether the NHBC Grade 1 Standards for whole house heating, surely the aspirations of most people, should not be the norm.

A comparison between British and European Housing Standards

30.1. Introduction

This part of the report illustrates a simple comparison between current space mandatory standards in Britain with those in a number of European countries. Information on standards was sought from nine countries but up to the time of writing only six replies have been received. Due to differences in financing and subsidy arrangements in various countries, the comparative data requires some qualification, a note on particular aspects is shown for each Country. In addition, further data was obtained on heating standards, the provision of open space for children's play within housing developments which is shown under each Country.

30.2 The Comparison

Comparisons have been drawn between the standards applicable to public sector housing in Britain (Local Authority and Housing Association) with as far as possible those in the rented sector in Europe, although by no means all countries provide housing equivalent to this country's public sector.

30.3. England, Wales & Scotland

For the purpose of comparison, the standard for housing in Britain which has been used is, in the case of houses, an intermediate terrace house and in the case of small dwellings for 2 or 3 persons, the areas for flats and single storey bungalows, all to Department of the Environment and Scottish Development standards. It was not possible to refine the comparison within the dwelling mix variants which occur—eg: flats or end of terrace dwellings, nor to include more specialised accommodation such as warden aided or disabled persons accommodation.

30.4. Belgium

Space Standards

Recommended minimum standards are laid down by the 'Societe Nationale due Logement' a body which provides housing finance under guarantee from the State. A similar body 'Societe Nationale due Terreine' provides finance for land.

Heating Standards

Minimum mandatory standards of heating for various rooms in any dwelling are—

Living Rooms and Kitchens	20°C
Bedrooms—1 room at	18°C
,, —other rooms at	12°C
Bathrooms	22°C

The above design temperature must be achieved with an external temperature of −10°C on the coast and −16°C on the high plateau inland.

Housing Finance

Public sector housing is financed by loans from the Societe Nationale du Logement (buildings) and Societe Nationale du Terreine (land). Repayment of capital loans to the Societies is on a basis of 66 years at reducing rates of interest.

Play Space in Housing Developments

There is no mandatory requirement for the provision of play space or other open space as part of a development.

30.5. Denmark

Space Standards

Standards are not strictly defined for various dwelling sizes, except in respect of minima for rooms. In practice, standards appear to be greater than DOE standards.

Heating Standards

There are no fixed standards for heating of dwellings.

Housing Finance

Non-profit housing (some 7000 dwellings per year) is financed by the loans from the State (10% interest free), the municipality (6%) and the National Building Fund (7%). These are repaid when the property is economically on its feet with a maximum period of 50 years. The remainder of the cost is provided by the tenant (3%) and a mortgage—74%

(the State offers an interest guarantee of between 6% and the true market rate of interest, phasing out from the fifth year after completion of the dwelling by annual increases up to the true rate.

Play Space in Housing Development

Play space and other open spaces are mandatory, the cost being included as part of the overall development costs.

Space Standards

The Finnish building code lays down minimum standards for dwellings in both the private and rented sectors. Dwellings which receive Government subsidy must also conform to standards laid down by the National Housing Board. Subsidised housing space standards are expressed in bands of areas for various dwelling sizes. The areas can be exceeded by 5% in single family dwellings if a sauna is provided and/or in above single storey dwellings by another 5%. There is a limit of $120m^2$ on the size of a dwelling which can receive government subsidy.

Heating Standards

For all rooms the design temperature must achieve 18°C–20°C with an external temperature of −28°C to −40°C.

Housing Finance

Virtually all rented dwellings receive government subsidy. The government loan is for 25 years at between 1%–3% interest on 60% of building costs, private bank loans provide 30%–35% of the remainder at between 9.25% and 10.75% interest and the tenant/owners own capital provides the balance of 5%–10%. Rent levels are regulated by the National Housing Board and cover maintenance and capital costs, additional housing subsidies are granted to low income families.

Play Space within Housing Developments

A provision per dwelling of between $5–10m^2$ must be provided in any development.

30.7. Netherlands

Space Standards

The standards for and design of all dwellings are regulated by Model Building Byelaws laid down by the Association of Netherlands Local Authorities and the Ministry of Housing and Physical Planning. The Byelaws define both dwelling areas and room sizes in considerable detail plus storage and other requirements.

Minimum temperatures for various rooms in a dwelling must achieve the following—

Living Areas	22°C
Bedrooms	18°C

Housing Finance

Rented sector housing for low income groups (some 33% of annual housebuilding production) is provided by private enterprise, housing associations and municipalities are financed under statutory financing schemes. This is in the form of loans repayable over 50 years (building costs) and 75 years (land), annual repayments being calculated on interest percentages fixed according to an annuity system. In addition, government provides a reducing subsidy for 10 years, the reduction being based upon rents being raised over the period to a 'cost rent'.

Play Space in Housing Developments

There is no mandatory provision.

Space Standards

The design of dwellings is controlled by the National Housing Board resulting in considerable standardisation of plan type and modular component usage. Vetting by this board means that dwellings are eligible for government subsidy and building permit. Space standards are regulated by a norm which stipulates the maximum number of persons per room for a given area. It was not possible therefore to produce a comparison with British space standards.

Heating Standards

The minimum standard for all rooms must be 18°C. The relevant external temperature was not specified. It is significant to note that since the energy crisis of 1973 regulations have been introduced to reduce energy consumption in dwellings in the order of 40% below the 1973 level by 1985.

Housing Finance

A state housing loan system is in operation. The loan approximates to an interest rate of about 4% on tenanted and tenant/ownership dwellings with individual subsidies for various family sizes and circumstances.

Play Space in Housing Developments

Provision of play space is mandatory, additional loans are available to finance the provision of them.

30.9. Switzerland

Space Standards

Standards are laid down by the Swiss Confederation for dwellings subsidised by the government, standards for other housing are defined by municipalities or cantonal government (Equivalent of regional government).

Heating Standards

No standards are laid down by the government but usual temperature minima are—

Living Rooms	22°C
Bedrooms	18°C

Housing Finance

In Switzerland 95% of all dwellings are exclusively financed by the private banking sector, the remainder, whilst being financed by the banks, is subsidised on up to 90% of the construction cost by the government. Some cantons and municipalities have their own subsidy programmes. Dwellings subsidised by the government are provided with a firs mortgage of 60% of the cost, a second mortgage of 30% (guaranteed by the government) and a 10% down payment by the occupier. The first mortgage is generally not repayable, the second has to be repaid over 20–25 years at an approximate interest rate of 5–5% p.a.

Play Space in Housing Developments

There are no federal requirements; cantons and municipalities generally require space under town planning requirements. Play space is financed by the commune or non profit organisations and co-operatives or the cost is included as part of the rent.

31. Children at Play

The design and provision of Children's Play areas within Local Authority housing developments.

31.1. Introduction

The need for design guidance in this problem has arisen through experience gained over the past few years in providing play areas and the considerable problems which play causes in terms of disturbance and annoyance to residents. The provision of play areas within housing schemes has been, until recent times, quite small. However, over the past few years there has been a greater awareness of the need to provide adequate play facilities within the housing environment. The Department of the Environment, following the carrying out of considerable research into the problem, announced in Circular 79/72 that a special Cost Yardstick Allowance would in future be available to local authorities for the provision of play areas in conjunction with new housing areas. This was in addition to finance which is available under Section 93 of the Housing Act for providing play areas adjacent to or within existing local authority housing areas. The density to which it is necessary to build in order to meet the housing cost yardstick levels, plus the increased provision for the motor car over the past few years, has meant that little green space can be made available in housing areas with a consequence that in order to cater for the needs of resident children, great care is needed in the design and location of play areas. Because most schemes accommodate a wide range of family sizes; including aged persons, couples without families or with older children and younger couples with children, it is necessary in locating play areas to consider the effect of children at play on the whole population so that nuisance and distrubance is not caused to residents. It has been found, through experience, that the provision of equipment in play areas laid down by the Department of the Environment in Circular 79/72 is in excess of a tolerable level to residents. This design guide therefore sets down, in addition to the space standards to be used and location of areas, the extent and types of equipment to be provided in future schemes.

31.2. Current Problems and Complaints from Residents

One of the main problems found in providing children's play spaces, particularly in redevelopment areas, is often that children are attracted into new housing areas from existing adjacent housing because no play provision was made when those developments were built. It appears that there will be no proper solution to this problem until such time as towns and cities can be adequately provided with play space in all existing housing areas. The general effect of disturbance by children from within a development may, by careful design and the provision of small play spaces for only the younger age group, help to reduce this problem, but frequently nuisance is caused by older children merely congregating around a play area which becomes a focal point at which they meet. It has also been found that teenagers passing through new housing abuse equipment late at night. This has been particularly noticeable where play spaces have been sited adjacent to main pedestrian routes. This problem might be lessened by siting play areas within family housing areas and also by providing equipment suitable only for smaller children, but because of housing density it will be inevitable that play space will be closer to dwellings thus causing other problems. Careful consideration is also needed of the siting of seats for mothers and other residents which also suffer from abuse by teenagers. A major source of complaint has been from old people who have had play areas adjacent to their dwellings; these people are less tolerant of noise from children than are younger parents. Action has been taken in recent schemes to design older persons' and non-family accommodation away from family houses so that, whilst these people can still feel part of the community, they are less affected by children at play. It is expected that play areas will provide a great attraction to children on the estates initially; however, once the novelty dies away, play spaces generally appear to become more accepted by residents. Insensitive location at the design stage can cause long-term problems leading to the eventual removal of equipment.

31.3. The Hierarchy of Play Provision

In providing for the needs of children at play within housing schemes, consideration must be given to the age groups of children and the form which the groups play will take.

Age Groups

Group 1	(up to 5 years old)	Most play is within private gardens under direct supervision. From 4 to 6 play outside is frequently supervised by older sisters or brothers
Group 2	(5–10 years old)	Specific provision required
Group 3	(10–15 years old)	Specific provision required

The age groups cannot be taken to be rigid as inevitably some overlap will occur between them. It is felt that provision should be made within housing areas only for Age Group 2 but that equipment provided should be kept in scale so as to provide less attraction to older children within this group and Age Group 3. Provision for Age Group 3 (10–15) should be made in the form of large equipped and kickabout areas on the periphery of housing areas or preferably in Public Open Spaces outside housing areas but as far as possible within easy reach. The present provision of $3m^2$ per child bedspace is considered reasonable and it is recommended that this policy should continue provided that adequate privacy can be ensured for adjacent residents as stated under para 31.4.

Recommendations

1. That the provision of play spaces should be made within housing areas for Age Group 2.
2. That as far as possible provision should be made on the periphery of schemes for Age Group 3.
3. That $3m^2$ of play area continue to be provided.

31.4. Location of Play Areas

As stated in para 31.2, provision for smaller children should be made within housing areas but these must be located in positions where they will not cause annoyance to older persons and disabled. At the design stage, it is essential to consider the relationship of play spaces to adjacent dwellings so that the minimum of annoyance is caused to residents. However, it must be borne in mind that play spaces should be sited so that a measure of parental supervision can be given. Where provision is made for older children, it is essential to ensure that the siting and design takes into account adequate protection for residents from visual intrusion and noise. Such preventative measures as adequate distances from houses, mounded grass areas to deter ball games and dense protective planting need consideration where space which might be used for play are close to dwellings.

Recommendation

That where public open space is available immediately adjacent to housing areas, no provision for older children within the housing should be made. Play does not take place solely in 'planned' play areas. All areas, particularly footways and parking areas, are fair game for children to play on. DOE research has shown that by far the larger percentage of play takes place in such areas. It has to be accepted that this is inevitable, and that the control can only be exercised by residents; it is essential therefore to ensure that vehicle speeds in courts or parking areas are kept to a minimum by careful design.

31.5. Equipment and Design

The DOE stipulate certain types of equipment and sizes of play spaces in order to obtain the special yardstick allowance. It is considered from experience that, whilst the space provision of $3m^2$ per child bedspace is adequate, the equipment provision is excessive and should be reduced considerably and should, as stated in para 3.1 be small scale so as to provide less attraction to older children.

Recommendations

That equipment provided within housing areas should be small in scale so as to provide the least attraction to older children. Ideally, the total area available for play should be well spread throughout family housing areas so that no one space provides too great an attraction with a consequent large number of children using it. Larger grassed areas should be considered as an alternative to hard-surfaced equipped areas, but care should be taken to ensure that if these areas are adjacent to houses, sufficient mounding and planting is provided in order to avoid it being used for ball games. Where provision is made for ball play for older children, it is suggested that properly fenced and surfaced areas should be provided. In selecting equipment for play areas, visual privacy to adjacent private gardens must be borne in mind. High equipment such as large climbing frames or slides or high mounds are to be avoided in close proximity to dwellings. It should be noted that freestanding slides can be dangerous and slides built on mounds are preferable. Sandpits are not used as they require constant maintenance and are often fouled by domestic pets.

31.6. Summary

Whilst children at play account for a large proportion of initial complaints from residents, it is considered essential that the provision of children's play spaces in housing areas should continue. It is hoped that the preceding guidelines and recommendations will obviate some of the problems recently experienced but they cannot guard against anti-social behaviour by older children.

31.7. Recommendations

That the provision of play spaces should be made within housing areas for Age Group 2.

That as far as possible provision should be made on the periphery of schemes for Age Group 3.

That $3m^2$ of play areas continue to be provided.

That, where public open space is available immediately adjacent to housing areas, no provision for older children should be made.

That equipment provided within housing areas should be small in scale so as to provide the least attraction to older children.

32. Some readers can and will comment that in my last two Reviews I have not commented upon architecture as such. This is quite true, but I have regarded it most important to discuss policy issues such as local government re-organisation/the construction industry/workloads/residential layouts/the Government's housing policy and housing standards. Out of these and given the right decisions will in my view emerge the built environment which can then be commented upon.

CONSTRUCTION INDUSTRY PROSPECTS

Review by FRANK GOSTLING

President of the National Federation of Building Trades Employers

There seems at last a real prospect that 1978 will see the beginning of a gradual recovery by the construction industry from the severe recession which has gripped it since 1974.

Statistical forecasts by the National Economics Development Committees for building and civil engineering, from the Department of the Environment and, indeed, from NFBTE's own State of Trade Enquiries indicate a slight upturn in demand for new work this year and a further increase next year.

This year should see an increase in the number of new private houses started—possibly over 150,000 compared with the 130,000 started last year and there are signs that the private industrial and commercial market is picking up also.

These basically encouraging trends have been buttressed by the allocation in various Budgets and mini-Budgets of several hundreds of millions of pounds worth of extra public expenditure on construction programmes.

So it really does begin to look as if the end of the worst construction recession since the War is at last in sight.

All this said, however, it must be stressed that the recovery is beginning from a very low point in construction activity. Output of new work is at least 25 per cent lower than at the last period of high construction activity in 1973.

Unemployment in the construction industry remains at or above the 200,000 level. If various ancillary industries are taken into account the total of unemployed in or associated with this industry is still probably over a quarter of a million.

Also there are disturbing signs that the industry's programme for recruitment and training of apprentices is faltering as more and more firms run out of new work to employ their apprentices on.

Thus in 1975 13,093 apprentices were registered through the industry's National Joint Council Training Scheme. In 1976 this fell to 11,336 and last year fell to 10,249.

Total current apprenticeships indicate an even more gloomy situation. At the end of 1977 only 23,000 apprenticeships were in being compared with 35,000 a year earlier.

Above all, the recession has cost the industry many thousands of building firms that have become insolvent for one reason or another and gone out of business.

So the recession, one way or another, has cost the industry dear. Now, however, the worst seems to be over.

There are, nevertheless, two serious problems confronting the construction industry on which action of one kind or another is urgently necessary if further serious disruption of building activity is to be avoided.

The first of these problems is a rapidly approaching land 'famine' which could threaten the private house-building programme as soon as 1979.

There are various factors that are contributing to this growing shortage of builders' basic raw material.

They range from the fundamental 'no growth' attitude reflected in many of the county Structure Plans under which building land is allocated, through the lengthy and costly delays stemming from the operation of the planning and development control system to the disastrous effects that the Community Land Act and the Development Land Tax have been on the supply of land both from local authorities and from the private sector.

In fact NFBTE's affiliated House Builders Federation has estimated that builders are already having difficulty in finding the land they need for house-building programmes in 1979 and 1980.

So there is an urgent need for the Government to do three things: first, accept that there is a serious land shortage looming rather than arguing statistics; secondly, streamline the planning and development control system and thirdly, cut the rate of Development Land Tax to revive the private land market.

Such action will by no means solve the problem completely, but it could mitigate some of the worst bottle-necks in land supply which will inevitably occur if no action is taken at all.

The second of the major problems confronting the construction industry at the moment arises from the unanimous adoption by the 1977 Labour Party Conference of the Party's National Executive Committee policy statement, "Building Britain's Future"—a document which contains proposals to nationalise large sections of the construction industry.

The policy statement proposes the establishment of numerous bureaucratic Boards and Agencies including a National Construction Corporation, based on the acquisition of one or more of our major national contractors; a Building Materials Corporation; a Public Procurement Agency; a statutory Construction Industry Manpower Board; "workers' co-operatives" to move into areas of work currently carried out by smaller firms in the building industry and, needless to say, a powerful Central Agency to oversee the expansion and development of local authorities' direct labour building departments.

To float such proposals at a time when the construction industry was recovering from one of its most severe recessions ever, was, to say the least, the height of irresponsibility.

The proposals, which were the product of a Study Group heavily weighted with Left Wing MPs and construction trade unionists, are based on political dogma rather than any practical view of how the construction industry operates and how it will develop in the future.

The cost of the establishment of these nightmarish bureaucratic monoliths would be enormous. And the bill would, of course, have to be footed by the taxpayers and ratepayers.

So NFBTE, together with the Federation of Civil Engineering Contractors, formed the Campaign Against Building Industry Nationalisation (CABIN) to combat these proposals and this organisation has been busily engaged in this task ever since.

The construction industry is, by its very nature, one of the worst and most impractical candidates for nationalisation of any industry in this country.

The proposals in "Building Britain's Future" should be scrapped and construction taken "off the agenda" for nationalisation altogether. Then the construction industry could get on with the job it is best equipped to do—serving its clients in both the public and private sectors and providing the community at large with flexible, increasingly efficient and cost-effective building services.

Important Advance in repair of Concrete Structures

The CATHITE method of repair is based on fundamental scientific principles. It halts decay and the new repair becomes monolithic with the old concrete and load bearing. It is unlikely that this great adhesion can be achieved by other means. The repaired structure is given a new long lease of life with the minimum risk of further spalling. It looks, functions and has the life of a new job. No resins, mesh or guns are used to accomplish these outstanding results. Moreover the CATHITE method is dustless. BUILDING CONSORTIA

1. EDUCATIONAL BUILDING CONSORTIA

Soon after the war the Hertfordshire County Council developed a "kit" of components for primary schools as an alternative to the huts which authorities were often being forced to use because of the shortage of basic building materials. Their work was carried forward during the early 1950s by the Ministry of Education (as it then was) and by commercial manufacturers. A number of "systems" were produced, in which the components, though highly standardized, could be assembled without modification to produce a variety of buildings. These systems were widely used.

In 1957, on the initiative of the Nottinghamshire County Council, a consortium of local authorities was formed with the title of CLASP (Consortium of Local Authorities, Special Programme) to develop a system using a light steel frame. Two advantages were that the system would be under the control of a client and that, with the grouping of the requirements of a number of authorities, components would be produced in sufficient quantities to reduce costs.

Such was the success of CLASP that the consortium idea spread until it now covers a very large part of the country. Some consortia (notably CLASP) are strongly committed to industrializing the building process wherever appropriate. Others are rather more concerned to rationalize traditional construction so as to obtain the best value for money in the context of a local building industry.

The general aims of these consortia are to obtain economies by the co-ordinated purchase of components and to increase building productivity by rationalizing the building process, leading to a reduction in the time spent in design in the office and in construction on the site. They are concerned mainly with educational buildings, particularly schools, but their methods are also used successfully for such buildings as fire stations, clinics and offices. A special feature of the CLASP system is that it is designed to deal with the problem of mining subsidence faced by a number of its members.

All the consortia are continuously engaged on the improvement and development of their building methods. They have informal organizations consisting of a board of chief architects meeting three or four times a year, a technical working party meeting approximately every month and usually an annual meeting of elected representatives of member authorities. Full members play an active part in policy making. Authorities whose requirements are too small, or sporadic, to justify full membership may join as associate members through the agency of full members or the Department of Education and Science. Full members make proportionate contributions to meet the cost of development work; associate members pay a fee.

The consortia co-operate with the Department of Education and Science and with each other on work of common interest. DES are honorary members of all consortia.

THE NATIONAL BUILDING AGENCY

7 Arundel St., London, WC2R 3DZ (01-836 4488).

The National Building Agency was founded in 1964, it is a government sponsored, technical, advisory and consultancy agency, whose Board of Directors and Managing Director are appointed by the Secretary of State for the Environment acting jointly with the Secretaries of State for Scotland and Wales. In practice, the NBA operates as an independent consultancy, some 85% of turnover coming from fee earning projects, and approximately 15% from advisory or research activities financed by government grant.

The objectives of the NBA are to encourage the introduction of more productive and efficient methods of building, including improved design, management and maintenance methods; and to help implement government policies in relation to both housing and the construction industry.

The Agency is an organization of experts—under 200 throughout the UK, but with a wide range of skills—architects, engineers, surveyors, management consultants, economists, information scientists and people with specialist experience in the construction industry and particularly in housing.

Typical of the many current projects now being undertaken of interest to local authorities and housing associations are:

Rehabilitation of housing—help to assess needs, to define HAA's and GIA's, to prepare programmes, set up procedures and assess resources; and act as agent for the authority.

Carrying out of demonstration building projects to study and publicise particular aspects of improved techniques in design, construction and productivity.

Organization and staffing requirements for direct labour organizations.

Investigation and advice as to the cause of building failures and suitable remedial action required.

Establishing procedures for the effective control of development programmes.

Advice on the use of NBA Design and Build procedures (DoE circular 24/75; WO 42/75).

Research programme on housing for the disabled and elderly.

Jointly appraise house building systems with the Agrément Board.

In collaboration with others the preparation and publication of the NBA & Building Commodity File.

Review by JEAN M. RAMSDEN, FInstBCA
Secretary, Institute of Burial and Cremation Anministration (Inc.)

Cremation

For the first time for a number of years, there has been a decrease in the number of cremations as compared with the previous year. During the year ended 31st December 1977 405,730 cremations were carried out, compared with 413,722 during 1976, although the percentage of cremations to deaths, based on preliminary figures rose by approximately 1% from 62.3% to 63.2%. These figures indicate a fall in the death rate during the year.

The scheme for the training of crematorium technicians, operated by the Institute under the auspices of the Local Government Training Board is operating very satisfactorily, and during the year a number of cremator operators have been successful in obtaining the certificate of proficiency. This enables them to obtain a plus rate of pay, and gives their Authorities the assurance that their staff are trained to a high standard of efficiency. Details of the training scheme, and examinations, can be obtained from the Secretary of the Cremator Technicians Committee:

Mr. J. Sutton, FInstBCA,
Cemeteries & Crematorium Department,
Southampton, SO1 0AJ
(0703 28609)

The Institute, along with other interested parties, are still awaiting the implementation of the recommendations made in the Brodrick Report on Death Certification and Coroners. Many members are making representations to their local Members of Parliament, and the Institute looks forward to action being taken in the very near future.

Cemeteries and Burial Grounds

New cemeteries are continuing to be laid out and administered on the lawn-type principle, and many of the older cemeteries and burial grounds are being converted to this type by the removal of derelict kerbs and the levelling and turfing of grave surfaces. This allows maintenance to be undertaken by the more general use of mechanical grasscutting equipment, and the use of mechanical machinery for grave-digging.

Examinations For Officers

The Institute holds annual administrative and technical examinations, the successful Candidates finally obtaining the Diploma. The Examinations are divided into five parts in both the Intermediate and Final Sections:

1. Layout and Management of Cemeteries.
2. Office Records and Administration.
3. Burial & Cremation Law.
4. Cremation.
5. Horticulture.

Students are offered every assistance through the special Coaching Scheme, with excellent tutors, and in addition a seminar is held annually at Pendrell Hall College of Residential Adult Education, Codsall Wood, Nr. Wolverhampton, Staffs. The Examinations are recognised by the Local Government Examinations Board for promotion purposes, and also by the National Joint Council for Local Authorities Professional, Technical and Clerical Services. Details of the Coaching & Seminar Schemes and Examinations can be obtained from:

Mr. H. Howcroft, MInstBCA(Dip),
National Education Officer,
191 Earlham Rd., Norwich, NR2 3RG
(0603 53748)

Technical Advisers

Technical Advisory Services are operated both by The Institute of Burial and Cremation Administration (Inc.) and The Federation of British Cremation Authorities. They are designed to assist Local Authorities in the layout of cemeteries and the planning of crematoria, and to give advice on the administration thereof. These technical services are widely used and appreciated, and contact with the technical officers should in the first instance be made through the respective National Secretaries.

Conference

The 36th Joint Annual Conference of Burial and Cremation Authorities, under the auspices of the Institute and the Federation, was held in Bath on the 27th–29th September 1977; approximately 220 Delegates, comprised of Local Authority Representatives and Officers, attended, and came from all parts of the British Isles. At the Opening Session Delegates were welcomed by Councillor Johns, Ex-Mayor and twice Deputy Mayor of the City of Bath, and the following Addresses and Sessions proved to be very informative and interesting:

Address by The Lord Bishop of Bath and Wells, The Right Reverend John Bickersteth, MA.
"Embalming—is it necessary?", by Councillor M. J. Dodgson, NAFD, MBIE of Leeds.
"Shades of the Charnel-House", by Professor D. J. Gee, Dept. of Forensic Medicine, (University of Leeds).
"The Enlargement of Existing Cremation Facilities", by Alan Groves, Esq., FRIBA, FRSA (County Architect, Cornwall County Council).
"A Destiny of Trees", by J. Butterfield, Esq., MInstBCA(Dip), A.InstPRA, Parks Manager and Cemeteries Registrar, Thurrock Borough Council.
"The Development of Mortuary Facilities", by D. A. Smale, Esq., FInstBCA(Dip) Superintendent & Registrar of Cemeteries & Crematorium, Brighton.

Open Forum Panel: Councillor M. J. Dodgson, NAFD, MBIE; E. S. Turner, Esq., FInstBCA(Dip); S. D. Hitt, Esq., MInstBCA; P. G. Rust, Esq., FInstBCA; J. T. Coakley, Esq., FInstBCA(Dip).

Enquiries concerning the papers of this Conference, or the 1978 Conference to be held in Sheffield 5th/7th September, can be obtained from:—

Mr. R. J. W. Greenslade, ACIS, FInstBCA.
Joint Conference Secretary,
Canford Crematorium & Cemetery Office,

THE INSTITUTE OF BURIAL AND CREMATION ADMINISTRATION (Inc)

Secretary: Mrs. J. M. Ramsden, FInstBCA, Lawns Wood, 369 Otley Rd, Adel, Leeds, LS16 6AL (0532 463206).
President 1978/1979: P. G. Rust, FInstBCA, DPA, LAMTPI, Chief Executive, Wychavon District Council.

The Institute was founded on 17th October, 1913, at a meeting held at the Kensington Town Hall, and was first known as The United Kingdom Association of Cemetery Superintendents. In 1917 the title was changed to that of The National Association of Cemetery Superintendents, and later to the National Association of Cemetery and Crematorium Superintendents as cremation became more widely accepted. At the Annual General Meeting in 1947, in preparation for a future application for Incorporation, the name was changed to The Institute of Burial and Cremation Administration and became Incorporated under Licence of the Board of Trade in August 1958.

The Membership of the Institute is contained within eight Branches, covering the whole of the British Isles. Each Branch meets at least once every three months, and an Annual Meeting of all Members is held at the time of the Joint Conference of Burial and Cremation Authorities, arranged jointly by the Institute and the Federation of British Cremation Authorities.

The primary objects laid down at the first meeting were: "To promote the efficiency of cemeteries, a knowledge of the work appertaining thereto and to further the interests of the Cemetery Superintendent". Although they were extended in the Memorandum of Association on Incorporation, they are still the fundamental aims of the present Institute. Members seek to achieve its aims through its Branch activities, educational programme, technical advisory service, and publication of its Quarterly Journal and other literature dealing with Cemeteries and Crematoria, and with the disposal of the dead. The Institute holds annual administrative and technical examinations.

The business of the Institute is managed by a National Council, consisting of National Officers, Branch Secretaries, and Branch Representatives.

THE CREMATION SOCIETY OF GREAT BRITAIN

Address: Woodcut Hse., Ashford Rd., Hollingbourne, Maidstone, Kent, ME17 1XH (0622 37877 and 38034).

Established in 1874, the Society was the pioneer of cremation in Great Britain. Built the first crematorium in this country; drew up code of practice which later was adopted as the basis of the first Cremation Act 1902. Now a registered charity, the Cremation Society is pleased to offer its free advisory service to all municipalities. The Society organizes an annual conference for cremation authorities and in addition publishes a quarterly journal "Pharos". It also issues a very useful "Cremation Society Handbook". Further information is available from the General Secretary.

Review by R. P. GADD, LLB, FIArb, MCIT, AMRAeS
Secretary, Aerodrome Owners' Association

The most important event during the year under review has been the publication of the long awaited Government White Paper on Airport Policy. The airport sector of the aviation industry has been marking time for more than a year awaiting this report. Although not every airport and every area is satisfied with the conclusions in the White Paper it does seem that at least some of the basic facts of life have been stated. Most important is the conclusion by the Government that the air transport industry makes a valuable contribution to the economy and therefore a national airport system is a necessity. Unfortunately and unreasonably the Government has also stated that air transport should not be subsidized by either the taxpayer or ratepayer. This does not seem inequitable when it is considered that all other sections of transport, namely the ports and railways and, of course, roads, receive massive Government subsidies of one kind or another. It is anticipated that the 1976 figure of 44-million passengers using airports in Great Britain will reach a minimum of 86-million in 1990. The ideal way for the Government to ensure that airport development meets this need would be to institute something like the United States Federal Aviation Airport Development Air Programme; during this year some 355-million dollars has been allocated to airports for use over the next two or three years in connection with development programmes. It is felt that a smaller version of such a programme would be of inestimable benefit to both the UK airport authorities and to the country as a whole.

In the Airport Policy document the Government sets out the framework of a national airport system of treating the London area as a separate case and then classifying airports throughout the rest of the country in the following way. Class A, Gateway International Airports; Class B, Regional Airports with some international services; Class C, Local Airports mostly General Aviation but with some feeder services, and Class D, General Aviation. The only Class A airport outside London would be Manchester, most other Regional Airports are of Class B, although it does seem that in one or two cases the Government has ignored commercial factors and consumer choice.

The Government has taken full account of the environmental considerations relating to airport development and has grasped the nettle by stating firmly that jet aircraft which are not noise certificated will be banned from the British Register after January 1986. The Government have also noted the problems of airport access and the planning considerations which need to be taken into account with airport development. Although obviously the White Paper does not please all parts of the airport industry and one or two parts please none of the industry, the Government should be congratulated for producing what is at least a basis for planning a viable airport system for the UK in the 1980s/1990s.

In the latter part of the year under review the Government introduced into the House of Commons the legislation relating to airport security charges. The effect of this legislation will be that the expense of security measures at UK airports, which has hitherto been met from Government funds, will now be paid for by an 80p levy upon arriving passengers at 28 designated UK airports. The airport representatives fought strenuously to avoid the imposition of this charge on the grounds that the security and safety of airline passengers and airport visitors was in fact a Government responsibility, but these protests were unavailing and the levy will be effective with effect 1st April 1978.

1977 was also the year of the cheap Atlantic flight. The very low fare flights on the North Atlantic route introduced by Laker Airways show that it is possible to operate aircraft on at least some routes at a price to the passenger which makes air travel a viable proposition. Although of course there was an outcry from other airlines using the route, suggesting that it could not be maintained economically, nevertheless it is noticeable that any number of airlines on the North Atlantic route are now introducing low fares of one kind or another. From the consumer point of view it is a development to be welcomed, although it is fair to add that for the long term benefit of air transport it is right that airlines should realize a reasonable profit level so that fleet replacement and safety standards can be maintained. It may be that the Atlantic routes are not the only area in which low fares could be introduced, although it is obvious that IATA would resist any fare cutting as long as possible.

Most airports showed an increase in traffic and passengers during the year and although not many took any positive action about development projects, it is expected that the publication of the White Paper will, certainly for some airports, provide the stimulus required to start much needed development.

East Midlands Airport continued throughout 1977 on its planned expansion with the opening of the new international departure lounges. This means that the airport can handle up to 1½ million passengers a year without further major capital expenditure.

The White Paper on airport development in the UK sees East Midlands Airport as a Regional Airport in the short term but as a possible Gateway International Airport in the long term. And with this in mind, the airport's governing body is considering the extension of the main runway to cope with the forecast demands for a centrally situated airport able to cope with medium and medium-long haul air traffic. Cost of this extension at present day prices would be £4½m.

British Midland Airways, the airline based at East Midlands Airport, opened its new, £350,000 computer reservations terminal during 1977, which means that travellers from East Midlands Airport can obtain up-to-the-minute information on world-wide travel.

During the year, the airport dealt with 607,453 passengers, an increase of ·09 per cent on the previous year, but freight, at 5,239,568 kilos, showed a downturn of 32·5 per cent on 1976. In the first two months of 1978, however, the freight figures showed a dramatic increase of over 80 per cent on the same months in 1977.

Planning permission has been given for the development of a 100-bedroom hotel at the entrance to the airport complex and contracts have been signed for the development, over the next two or three years, of a 10-acre air cargo site which will make East Midlands Airport one of the largest air freight centres in Europe.

A major breakthrough on air cargo was the introduction of a scheduled air freight service to Amsterdam on five days each week to connect with international and intercontinental flights, and the opening of a cargo office at East Midlands Airport by KLM, the Dutch international airline.

East Midlands Airport is now responsible for all of its own security and an enlarged security force carries out passenger and baggage seaching previously undertaken by a private security organisation on behalf of the Department of Trade.

Manchester International Airport maintained its position as the major airport outside the London complex. The published accounts for the year ended 31st March 1977 show a trading surplus of £2,570,000 which after repayments of debt and interest thereon, left a net surplus for the year of £681,000 which was transferred to the Airport Authority's General Reserve Accounts.

This surplus was earned on a turnover of £10,650,000 of which operational income represented 54 per cent and commercial income, including that from car parks and concessions 46 per cent of the total revenue.

Traffic statistics for the financial year were as follows—number of passengers (including transit) 2,892,000; number of aircraft movements 60,000, and volume of freight handled (tonnes) 36,500.

Revenue expenditure for the year amounted to £8,080,000 including contributions to Runway Renewals Funds of £900,000. Repayments of debt, including interest on outstanding balances totalled a further £1,889,000. Salaries and wages to more than 1,000 staff amounted to £3,691,000 and represented 37 per cent of total costs, including debt charges.

A decision was taken by the Airport Authority in February 1978 to refurbish and extend the runway 06/28, work being carried out between March 1979 and April 1983 at an estimated total cost of around £20 million.

Shoreham Airport which is the major general aviation airport for the South coast is applying for planning permission to construct a winter strip as is used by Plymouth and Denham Airports. This will enable operations to continue throughout weather which at present causes problems with the grass strip.

Bristol Airport increased its total passenger figures during the last year by a little more than 3 per cent to a final figure of 259,137.

Norwich Airport had passenger figures for the year ended 1977 of 155,752 and expected that in the 1977/78 year a total of 181,000 will pass through the airport. Scheduled services from Norwich are now operated to Aberdeen, Amsterdam, Bergen, Birmingham, Edinburgh, Heathrow, Humberside, Jersey, Leeds/Bradford, Newcastle, Stavangar and Tees-side.

The report of British Airports Authority for the year 1976/77 shows that passenger traffic overall by South East and Scottish Airports increased by about 10 per cent during the year, which was an improvement on the recovery which began the previous year. At Edinburgh a new runway was opened and a Shuttle service was introduced which produced a large rise in passengers. Aberdeen airport continued to gain from the large North Sea oil industry traffic. Throughout the BAA airports the overall total of aircraft movements increased by only 0·4 per cent which was purely accounted for by the increasing number of wide-bodied jets coming into service. BAA made a profit before interest and tax of £17·2 million.

1977 was a better year for Airports and if the rate of inflation continues to fall it is probable that a number of Airports will be able to show substantially better results by the end of 1978.

AERODROME OWNERS ASSOCIATION

Secretary's Address: 18 Orchard St., Bristol, Avon, BS1 5DX (0272 392480)

The Aerodrome Owners Association was established in 1934 and has a continuous record of activity on behalf of Aerodrome Owners since then. It has been and is the only Association in the United Kingdom representing purely aerodrome interest. The objects of the Association are to promote, protect and further the interests of aerodrome owners throughout the United Kingdom, ranging from the largest major airport to the smallest grass airstrip and including stolports and heliports. The Association is the body consulted by the Government through the Departments of Trade and Industry and the Civil Aviation Authority—on proposed changes in the legislation affecting aerodromes, and on the line the Government proposes to take concerning aerodromes at international meetings, especially those of the International Civil Aviation Organisation.

Chairman: Coun. L. V. Worsdell, DFC.
Vice-Chairman: Coun. W. S. Marshall.
Secretary: R. P. Gadd, LLB, AMRAeS, FIArb, MCIT.

JOINT AIRPORTS COMMITTEE OF LOCAL AUTHORITIES

Secretary: T. H. Caulcott, 36 Old Queen St., London, SW1H 9JE (01-930 9861).

This Joint Committee was originally set up by the former AMC, CCA and UDCA in 1966 as a forum for the discussion of matters of concern and common interest to members of those Associations who operated aerodromes or who had an interest in them. In 1971 membership of JACOLA was limited to local authorities operating airports (non-operating authorities ceasing to be members), and an "operating authority" which was a consortium or joint committee was given two seats. Following the reorganization of local government, the three new Associations—ACC, ADC and AMA—re-appointed JACOLA in the Autumn of 1974, on the basis of one representative from each local authority airport, whether run by an individual authority, a joint committee or a consortium.

Membership of JACOLA now consists of elected members from Birmingham, Blackpool, Bournemouth (Hurn), Brighton/Hove/Worthing, Bristol, Cardiff, Coventry, East Midlands, Exeter, Gloucester/Cheltenham, Humberside, Leeds/Bradford, Liverpool, Luton, Manchester, Newcastle (North-East), Norwich, Southend, Sunderland, Swansea and Teesside Airports; in most cases the member is chairman of the committee controlling the airport.

The Chairman is Coun. Geoffrey Baum (Southend Airport). Advisers are the Airport Directors of Manchester, Newcastle and Southend, J. Gordon, the Chief Executive of Luton and the Clerk to the East Midlands Airport Authority.

BRITISH AIRPORTS AUTHORITY

Address: 2 Buckingham Gate, London, SW1E 6JL (01-834 6621)

The international airports at Heathrow, Gatwick, Stansted and Prestwick were vested in the British Airports Authority by virtue of the provisions of the Airports Authority Act 1965 on 1st April 1966. On 1st April 1971 Edinburgh Airport was vested in the Authority. On 1.1.75 Aberdeen Airport was vested in the BAA. On 1.4.75 Glasgow Airport was vested in the BAA.

The Authority's Board is as follows:

Chairman: N. J. Payne, CBE, BSc(Eng).

Deputy Chairman: W. D. H. Gregson, CBE.

Members: N. Vinson; M. Marks; J. Mulkern; D. W. Turner; Lord Allen of Fallowfield, CBE.

The Authority's statutory duty is to own and manage the seven airports mentioned above and to provide at those aerodromes such services and facilities, with the exception of navigation services, as are in the Authority's opinion necessary or desirable for their operation, having regard to the development of air transport and to efficiency, economy and safety of operation. It is also the Authority's financial duty to secure that its revenue is not less than sufficient for making provision for the meeting of charges properly chargeable to revenue, taking one year with another.

Secretary and Solicitor: M. W. T. Nott.

HEATHROW AIRPORT CONSULTATIVE COMMITTEE

The British Airports Authority which, under the Airports Authority Act 1965 (now consolidated in The Airports Authority Act 1975) replaced the Ministry of Aviation as the authority responsible for Heathrow Airport, has continued the consultative arrangements which are now provided for in Section 2 of the Act. The Committee is constituted on the following basis:

Greater London Council	6	London Chamber of Commerce and Industry	1

London Borough of Hounslow	3	Association of British Travel Agents	1
London Borough of Hillingdon	3	International Air Transport Association	1
Spelthorne BC	2	Consumers' Association	1
Slough Corporation	1	Voluntary Environmental and Amenity Groups	1

The Committee has an independent Chairman and Secretary.

In addition four independent members of the Passenger Services Sub-Committee are co-opted to the committee without voting rights.

CIVIL DEFENCE AND EMERGENCY PLANNING

Review by FRANK RAINE-ALLEN, MBE, CStJ, JP, DPA

There were no major changes in the Government's home defence policy during the year under review but the undertaking to provide and update general guidance to local authorities on their statutory duties for Home Defence planning continued. Within the limits imposed by the prevailing financial constraints, local authorities were urged to progress towards the completion of their plans for providing and maintaining services essential to the community in war. With the rate support grant settlement for 1977/78 showing a reduction of 6·7% to £2·8 million there was, however, no scope for additional grant aid for new activities by local authorities or for variations in the complement of their County emergency planning teams.

Public Survival Under Fallout Conditions

In my review of Home Defence and Emergency Planning in the 1976 edition of the Municipal Year Book reference was made to local authority plans for the survival of the public under radioactive fallout conditions following nuclear attack. Studies since held of the problems of implementing the guidance given by the Home Office suggest that some simplification of the recommended release procedures would increase the chances of success in operations designed to minimise the effects on the general public of exposure to radiation.

Whilst emphasizing the importance of avoiding all unnecessary exposure to radiation it was thought unlikely that Controllers would be able to exercise sufficient control over survivors so as to operate a complicated system of release procedures for different periods of time each day. On the assumption that enough people would heed the official advice to stay indoors until told it was safe to emerge, release procedures in fallout areas would probably be in three stages. These would be in the form of release bands of specified dose-rate limits and related to the total dose of radioactivity people would accumulate over 24 hours if they emerged from cover.

The Effects of Radioactive Fallout on Food, Agriculture and Fisheries

The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food made available to local authorities inEngland and Wales information derived from NATO sources on the effects of radioactive fallout on food, agriculture and fisheries. A report, intended as a guide for those concerned with the preparation of war emergency plans, was directed primarily to the survival period after nuclear attack. It brought up to date the scientific and technical background information on the effects of radiation from fallout on livestock and on crop production and the possible levels of contamination on foodstuffs and fish.

In any assessment of food resources after a nuclear attack, account must be taken of damage to crops by radiation, but because of many variables (e.g. the circumstances of the weapon detonation, the time of year and prevailing weather) the exact nature of the situation which could arise on any occasion cannot be predicted. The report, however, enables the general nature of problems likely to be experienced to be defined. Amongst the conclusions increased importance of beta radiation from ingested fallout material in ruminants was emphasized, making it important to prevent the grazing of these animals on contaminated pasture in the immediate post-attack period. The fact, too, that fallout particles can cause skin burns confirms the need to put animals under cover.

Food contamination, with the exception of milk, is not now considered to be a significant problem in the immediate post-attack period. There is no need for a food monitoring programme at this time and food and water should not be denied to a hungry or thirsty population because of possible contamination. A programme for controlling fallout contamination of milk will, however, be needed in the early post-attack period.

Scientific Advice

In consultation with the Association of County Councils, the Association of Metropolitan Authorities and the Association of District Councils, the Home Office sponsored a special Study at the Home Office College. Its purpose was to demonstrate to senior officers of local authorities the potential and the limitations of scientific support in home defence; to acquaint scientific advisers with the operational problems which would face Controllers, and with the nature of advice required in peace and war.

The scientific adviser was seen as a key figure in the local authority's wartime headquarters at a time when the effects of radioactive fallout governed operational decisions. It was, however, recognized that the whole desirable range of disciplines embracing science and technology cannot reside in any one body of scientific advisers however well the County Scientific Team is chosen. Selected scientific advisers might form part of regional scientific teams, and scientists and technologists allied to particular industries and services could make major contributions. Within a District or County the scientific adviser was also seen as a link with specialist groups and in this liaison capacity, as the Controller's staff officer in the scientific and technical fields, could contribute to the analysis and solution of longer term survival problems.

The recruitment of volunteers generally as Scientific Advisers does not admit a higher degree of selectivity but it was suggested that approaches might be widened from the obvious source of science teachers to include engineers and other technical officers inside or outside local government in order to get a broader spread of disciplines within a team. In this connection the Home Office prepared an introductory statement for use by local authority Emergency Planning Officers in their approach to prospective scientific advisers.

Scientific advisers can assist emergency planning teams and Chief Officers in matters with a scientific content, e.g. the assessment of protective factors of buildings, contingency planning and training for the operation of release schemes. They might also with advantage build up in peacetime, as a wartime management tool, a data book of District and County resources including scientific manpower in industry, essential services and other establishments. In view of the more general contribution science can make to peacetime planning and post-attack survival, it was recommended that some emphasis might also be placed upon operational research, mathematics and other branches of management science.

Inland Transport in War

In nuclear war, nationwide disruption of transport must be expected. Extensive damage would inevitably bring inland transport to a halt in some areas, although elsewhere parts of the system would survive undamaged or could be repaired. In this connection and to provide a background against which local authorities might proceed with their home defence planning, the Home Office in conjunction with the Department of Transport issued a memorandum "Inland Transport in War". Although not excluding other forms of transport, it dealt in the main with road transport.

Surviving transport resources, with improvization and cannibalization, should be able to meet the needs of essential services but in many areas fallout would, for a time restrict movement. Once fallout had decayed, however, and temporary repairs made to vital roads, railway tracks and bridges, the overriding factor would probably be the availability of fuel and power. With the most stringent economy of fuel and power, even for priority purposes, some essential movement could be organised. With the resumption of energy production, these movements could be extended progressively until some national network connecting all regions would be operating.

The Regional Commissioner's staff will include an inland transport administrator appointed by the Department of Transport to advise on the integrated use of road, rail and waterway services and priorities to meet the longer term requirements. Below the Regional Commissioner's staff, the Department of Transport in consultation with the local authority in question will designate in peacetime for each County and London Group one Inland Transport Co-ordinator who will be supported as necessary by liaison officers also designated in peace time for each transport mode. The transport co-ordinators would concentrate on the problems of co-ordinating the operation of transport in their area and adjacent areas. Where necessary the Department of Transport will also nominate inland transport authorities for the wartime staff of District of London Borough Controllers.

The inland transport co-ordinators would not be concerned with the actual management of vehicles or other forms of transport—the surviving operators of inland transport would be expected to continue functioning. After attack, however, co-ordinators would attempt to assess transport capability and, subject to any overriding directions from Controllers and in consultation with other branches of regional government, would endeavour to re-organize fragmented resources into working units based as far as possible on the peacetime management structure.

Although detailed list of vehicles to be requisitioned were a feature of civil defence plans in the past, it is now expected that local and other public authorities' road transport requirements in excess of what they operate in peacetime would be minimal. In the period of transition to war, once emergency powers had been granted, Traffic Commissioners acting on behalf of the Crown would requisition vehicles not otherwise available. Specific transport requirements for a post-nuclear attack situation cannot, of course, be prepared now, but Local Authority Controllers will themselves have requisitioning powers available.

Local authorities were recommended to invite Inland Transport Co-ordinators to take part in home defence studies and exercises. Their local knowledge and experience should enable them to make a useful contribution to any wartime transport problems.

Home Defence in Industry

The attention of local authorities was drawn by the Home Office to a publication by the Chemical Industries Association Limited "Recommended Procedures for Handling Major Emergencies". The view expressed in the foreword was endorsed that the procedures would be equally relevant in the event of war notwithstanding the likely differences in the scale of the consequences. The Government recognized the importance of senior managers in the public and the private sectors of industry devoting a little time to the study of wartime problems, and facilities for special industrial studies could be made available at the Home Defence College.

Conclusion

Within the confines of their all too limited budgets for Home Defence, local authorities were able to make progress in their statutory duties. But much remains to be done. Certainly the range and diversity of the tasks confronting them in a war emergency would be extensive although the activation of their plans would be dependent upon national direction and advice. Emergency Planning Officers therefore particularly welcomed the undertaking given by the Home Office to pursue with the Local Authorities' Associations a recommendation to examine methods and measures by which a nationally co-ordinated implementation of plans might be achieved in step with Government decisions. If the clouds of war should ever be discernible and darken the international scene the state of readiness of all plans for the transition of local government to a war footing could be critical.

REGIONAL SCIENTIFIC ADVISERS FOR HOME DEFENCE

An organization of Regional Scientific Advisers for Home Defence has been set up throughout the country. In England and Wales the appointments are made by the Home Office, and the Advisers, who serve in an honorary capacity in time of peace, are accredited to the staff of the Scientific Advisory Branch of the Home Office. They give their advice and assistance independently to the Home Defence authorities in their own Regions. REGIONAL AND SUB-REGIONAL BOUNDARIES

Consequent upon the reorganization of local Government in England and Wales under the Local Government Act 1972 revised Home Defence Regional and Sub-Regional boundaries were announced by the Government in January 1973. It was not possible to draw boundaries compatible with every peacetime grouping but an attempt was made to remove earlier inconsistencies without introducing too many changes in the pattern of the regions. The new groupings, which took effect on 1 April 1974, provide for a reduced total of 10 Regions and 17 Sub-Regions as follows:

Region	Sub-Region	Counties
1 North	11	Cleveland, Durham, Northumberland, Tyne and Wear.

THE ASSOCIATION OF CIVIL DEFENCE AND EMERGENCY PLANNING OFFICERS

Formerly, "The Association of Civil Defence Officers", it was founded at a meeting in St. Marylebone Town Hall, London, in 1952, as a professional organisation for all Civil Defence Officers.

Following athe restructure of Home Defence activities in 1972, and the introduction of the term, "Emergency Planning Officer", the Association added this name to its title. It remained, however, essentially the same organisation with its objectives being:—

> "To promote the effectiveness of Civil Defence and Emergency Planning in the United Kingdom and to promote the professional interest of its members."

The current President of the Association, is Lord Chalfont, who succeeded Lord Shawcross in 1976.

Organisationally, the Association, whilst operating at national level, maintains a number of regional branches. These branches, as well as supplying representation for the Council of the Association, provide a framework for local activities such as talks, visits, studies and seminars.

Nationally the Council not only manages the affairs of the Association, but also establishes working groups to study various aspects of Emergency Planning. In addition, the Annual Study of the Association provides a forum for the exposition of various aspects of Home Defence and an occasion when all who are interested in the subject, including the professionals, other local government officers, members, officers and members of other public bodies, delegates from industry, the Civil Service and Government, can come together and contribute to the building up of an effective Home Defence system.

Hon. General Secretary: G. E. Willcock, 8 Meadow Rd., Harborne, Birmingham, B17 8BX.
Chairman: Major I. G. Roberts.

SOCIETY OF COUNTY EMERGENCY PLANNING OFFICERS

The Society of County Emergency Planning Officers was authorised as one of the professional societies of the then County Councils Association in September 1966. On Local Government reorganisation in April 1974, continued as a professional society of the new Association of County Councils.

Its main objectives are to promote the study of and the exchange of knowledge of Emergency Planning as it affects County Councils and to discuss existing and suggested legislation and policy with the Association of County Councils and relevant Government Departments.

Secretary: J. N. Ellinson, County Hall, Bedford, MK42 9AP (0234 63222).

LOCAL AUTHORITY EMERGENCY PLANNING AND RABIES CONTROL

Review by G. E. WILLCOCK
County Emergency Planning Officer, West Midlands County Council

An Emergency Planning Officer gets a varied response from fellow officers within a local authority. Although most responsible local government officers accept the need for contingency plans for an emergency, more pressing day-to-day problems often take greater priority. Nevertheless the Emergency Planning Officer will usually be able to impress upon fellow officers the necessity to commit both staff and resources to ensure that the authority can properly discharge its statutory responsibilities. Generalized contingency plans, for peace or wartime emergencies, are born out of a realization that there are occasions when the normal method of working for a local authority will be insufficient to deal with an urgent, possibly disastrous, situation. They provide a framework within which the authority's resources can be activated quickly and adapted to exceptional circumstances.

A local authority can identify certain specific occurrences in which it may be called upon to act in a manner outside its normal mode of operation and which require a particular plan to which the authority will work. All County Councils and London Boroughs are "Diseases of Animals" authorities. As such they are charged, under the relevant Rabies legislation, with implementing the policy dictated by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. Indeed, the Ministry gave guidance and instructions to County Councils early in 1976 so that they could prepare their own contingency plans to deal effectively with an outbreak of rabies.

The function of an Emergency Planning Officer in this context is not to take over responsibility for the activity, but rather to carry out his normal role by assisting the Diseases and Animals officer in stimulating and co-ordinating the planning. The officer given responsibility for Diseases of Animals may vary from one authority to another; one County may act through the County Land Agent, and another through a Consumer Protection Officer. However, whilst this identifies the officer mainly responsible for anti-rabies activities, it rapidly becomes evident that assistance will be required from other departments, other authorities, and also from bodies outside local government.

An early examination must be made, therefore, of the various activities that need to be undertaken in support of an anti-rabies operation. It should then be possible to allocate each of these to the various departments, organisations and authorities that are in the best position to discharge them. Establishing outline responsibilities will entail considerable consultation and co-ordination, and it must be emphasized that this is the most important part of the plan production process, as it forms the basis around which the plan will ultimately be written.

Having agreed and allocated outline responsiblities, the next step is to determine a framework in which all those involved will operate. There is a common requirement for all participants to know the general nature of the plan, how the County becomes involved, how overall control is to be exercised, and the various responsibilities of the others who are involved. If this information is set out in general fashion as a number of sections which can act as a frontispiece to the individual plan of every department or organisation, this structured approach to plan-writing avoids the need to provide all participants with the detailed plans of other departments and organisations but still requires everyone to understand the overall framework.

Each participating unit will then need to produce details setting out the means of undertaking the responsibilities allocated to them. The broad areas of activity can be summarised as follows:—

(a) Control, including communications and information.
(b) Exercizing "normal powers" under the Orders.
(c) Signposting for infected areas.
(d) Catching and impounding stray animals (with the concomitant destruction and disposal problems).

Across all these areas of activity there must be input from many of the different units contributing to the plan, and the Emergency Planning Officer will assist by acting as a liaison officer.

As the contingency plan governs activity which is abnormal for the various departments taking part, it is appropriate to produce a separate organisation structure, with its own chain of control incorporating a unique nomenclature. For example, in a County where the County Land Agent is responsible for Diseases of Animals activities, it may be more appropriate, for the purpose of a rabies operation, to call him or his nominee a Contingency Control Officer. The appointment of an officer with the title "Rabies Liaison Officer" in each department or organisation will assist the Emergency Planning Officer by giving a contact point for planning, and will provide a pivot on which activities will turn when the plan has to be activated. Once a system of "special appointments" has been adopted it becomes easier to construct the plans by carefully detailing the duties and responsibilities of the various officers. When making appointments under the plan, a number of nominations should be made for each function, since there is always a strong possibility that the first-named nominee is unavailable. Nominations should refer to job titles rather than the names of officers in post at any one time.

As with any emergency plan, the availability of resources to undertake the various tasks must also be investigated in advance. Careful assessment must be made as to whether or not stocks of various items should be purchased and stored and, where sources of supply are readily available, they must be identified and listed. This particular exercise can well be undertaken by the Emergency Planning Officer, who can also lend his expertise to the identification and earmarking of premises for use either as control centres of animal pounds.

Emergency Planning does not end with the paperwork outlined above, it extends into training and testing. A Rabies Contingency Plan is no exception, and the Emergency Planning Officer will be able to assist in the production of exercises and studies for this purpose.

Rabies control is an example of the value of an Emergency Planning Officer, who has the expertise to support the local authority's other officers in the formulation of their contingency plans, and who is committed full-time to this particular function.

LOCAL AUTHORITY EMERGENCY PLANNING AND STORM TIDES

Review by Capt. D. C. MERRIMAN
Emergency Services Planning Officer, Norfolk County Council

Twenty-five years have elapsed since the 1953 East Coast Flooding Disaster. I find it an appropriate time not only to review the past and look to the future but to remind those new to the services/ministries involved, of the immensity of the problem and the increasing occurrence of the "attack", if I should term it so. A complete reorganization of almost every Authority/Service/Ministry has taken place between 1972/74. The Local Government Act of 1972 Section 138 deals with the responsibility of Principal Authorities to plan to mitigate the circumstances of disaster. Various other statutory Authorities also have their instructions on what to do in disasters of various types.

The Home Office Circular ES 7/1975 "Major Accidents and National Disasters" has given to those who received it, a timely reminder of the need to have their Peacetime Emergency Plans not only on paper, but in a form which can be implemented and which is effective, easily understood and involving every service, both statutory and voluntary.

The main responsibility for planning has been placed upon the new County Councils assisted by District Councils. When all the services with the exception of Hospitals were Local Authority responsibilities the planning (if any existed) was much easier in one sense, but the larger number of small units involved, meant that very rarely could they "counter" a disaster adequately because the resources were never really available, or enough.

In this review I intend to deal only with the North Sea and the perils that can affect thousands who live below the High Water levels, on the East Coast.

The Water Authorities

Two million acres of land in England and Wales lie below the High Water levels, most of it along the East Coast. This land is mainly protected by natural defences, cliffs, sand dunes and shingle banks from tidal deposits. Some portions have sea walls, tidal river embankments, soft and hard clay, sand and single sea walls built by man, some centuries ago. Most of these were improved by the River Boards set up in 1950 from various bodies to take over and improve the defences. Some 34 River Boards were in operation. The 1953 Flood Disaster (to which I will refer later as my "modern memory" equivalent of "disaster" imposed a test of great magnitude on these newly established authorities, and on the Ministry of Agriculture Fisheries and Food and other Government and Local Authority Departments.

The duties of the old River Boards have since 1974, been taken over by the Regional Water Authorities (Rivers Divisions) and with it, some 1,500 miles of sea and tidal embankments. Most of these embankments were improved after the 1953 floods to strengthen and heighten them to the new sea levels then encountered. It can be said that in 1977 and 1978 they stood the test fairly well in most places, at least where they were not fully tested. These defences can be likened to the "Maginot Line", they can be breached, or by-passed, at any whim of the weather, water, or weakened by the action of waves falling over the rear of them.

The Internal Drainage Boards remain intact with a vast task to clear flooded land. The "marshmen" play a vital role in reporting every suspected weak spot in sea defences.

The Sea and its "Perils" (Surges)

The North Sea tides run from North to South down the coast from Scotland to Kent. There is unfortunately a "bottle-neck" at the southern end—the English Channel, plus of course, a tidal system there.

Three tidal systems operate within the North Sea or in close proximity which affects its levels; low pressure areas and gale force winds command the changing volumes of water and many permutations of these can occur at any place along the coast at high water.

Large surge tides occur round the north of Scotland and low pressure areas cross the country and these two can coincide at any place on the coast, thereby "lifting" the water many feet above the normal expected, 8 to 10 feet in some cases.

It is thus a combination of high tides, gales and low pressure areas which cause the "surges" The idea that you can measure it at one Reference Point and expect the same results 10 miles further down the coast is a dream; no nautical almanac; no electronics; no computer, can at the moment, give an accurate picture at every specific point. Herein lies its dangers, herein is the demand on all concerned to plan their defences and on those who are at risk to recognise this.

Most have not even taken the trouble to acquaint themselves of the "flood pans" of the past, some are unaware of the last real disaster—in 1953, many reside for pleasure only, in an area which can, at short notice, produce disaster.

The East Coast Storm Tide Warning System (ECSTWS)

The system of warnings has been compiled from reports of the Waverley Committee set up after the 1953 Flood Disaster and operates down the entire East Coast in a uniform set of rules.

The Meterological Officer at Bracknell, manned for this purpose by naval experts and a contingent of MAFF issue the weather forecasts, the expected tide heights and high tide times at certain Reference Ports. These forecasts are issued through the Police and Water Authorities, who then join forces at selected and equipped Controls. The East Coast has been divided into Coastal Divisions:—

(a) Northumbrian with a Reference Port at North Shields	No. 1
(b) Cleveland to Mundesley in Norfolk —Reference Port—Immingham	No. 2
(c) Mundesley—Felixstowe approx.—Reference Port—Lowestoft	No. 3

(d) Felixstowe—Thames estuary—Reference Port—Southend No. 5

(e) Kent Coast No. 4

The warnings at present are as follows:—

"Alert" at 12 hrs. before forecast high tide.
"Alert confirmed" at 4 hrs in all divisions except Division 3 which is 6 hrs.
"Danger" 4 hrs.

The "Alert confirmed" and "Danger" warnings are to be treated alike, and have the same significance. At Lowestoft for instance tides can be 3·5 hours earlier than scheduled, hence a 6 hours warning in this Division.

Some 30–40 of the Alert warnings are issued between September and April each year. The tide is monitored all down the East Coast to ensure that only in real danger will the public be warned. (Only 1 or 2 if any, give rise to a formal warning to the public in the area affected).

Police and Water Authority Action (in Norfolk)

(a) The RIVERS DIVISION ENGINEER AND POLICE OFFICERS consult and at the ALERT (12 hours) warn DISTRICT COUNCILS (MARITIME) together with a large number of other Authorities and Persons; special staff prepare to go to observation posts and report conditions in specific areas; Railways, Electricity etc. are all alerted. MARITIME DISTRICT COUNCILS with their own "special" plan for the District, alert their own staffs to man specific points and report in to the main controls in their District.

(b) District Chief Executives join the Police with their own Engineers and when considered necessary alert the County based services, i.e. Divisional Surveyors (affiliated to each District); The Area/Group Social Services, who work in the Districts; the Area Education Officers who have control of school accommodation, the voluntary Societies of WRVS, BRCS, SJAB and others to "stand by" till the high tide has passed, or report to the nominated Assembly Points, Rest Centres etc; as required.

(c) Should the "Alert confirmed" or "Danger warning" be considered necessary at the 4 or 6 hour period, prior to "high water", the Wartime siren system, supplemented by others in more rural areas are manned by Police, District Councils (or sounded automatically in some cases) at each siren point. The sirens are sounded should the POLICE consider a Public Warning necessary, sounding the old "All Clear" signal 5 times—30 seconds on 15 seconds off. This is supplemented by loud hailer, warning messages over T.V. and radio on Anglia, Yorkshire and BBC channels, through the Chief Constable.

The RAEN (Radio Amateurs Emergency Network) are closely tied up with the Police, Water Authority and other services. The Highways with a vast network of communications, County/District wide would combine to ensure adequate communications, should the telephone system be either overloaded are not functioning. The County Council have affiliated the County based services to Districts where possible and are prepared for taking Overall Control, should the situation demand, to support the Maritime Districts.

So briefly, I have dealt with the problem and what we try to achieve to guard against loss of life. The question of property is of course governed by the "phenomena", that you cannot entirely stop water, you could be fortunate to divert it. To where? that is the vital permutation.

The Purges

Without a brief reference to the 1953 Disaster, memories are short (except to those who were directly involved). For the benefit of those not so acquainted, I give a few facts to enable them to visualise the magnitude of the problem involved, in the hope that activity and not apathy will guide those responsible to effective planning and preparation and to the realisation that not only are they involved, but they must involve everyone.

(a) Some 307 persons were drowned on the Coast. Some 1,800 in Holland.
(b) The sea defences were breached in 1,200 places and 160,000 acres of land were affected.
(c) Some 25/30,000 homes were flooded, some for a long period.
(d) Hundreds of sewage plants were put out of action together with water works.
(e) Many electricity generating stations were affected.
(f) 800,000 tons of sand was deposited in Sutton & Mablethorpe to a depth of several feet over 500,000 sq. yds.

(g) 130,000 persons were evacuated with some 30,000 for a considerable time.

(h) A submarine was sunk and a frigate lifted several yards from its berth.

(j) 11,432 animals from cows to caged birds were moved.

(k) 25,000 men worked in freezing weather to close the breaches in the sea walls.

(l) Incident points and permit entry and points were set up by police to arrange rescue and prevent looting.

(m) The Army provided 11,000 men, 1,500 vehicles, 60 Amphibious vehicles, 65 earth moving plants, 300 boats of varying natures, 17,000,000 sandbags to name but a few things. The Royal Navy, Fleet Air Arm and Royal Marines performed equal tasks to those of other services in all respects.

(n) The RAF flew round the clock sorties for photos of affected areas. They flew in millions of sandbags from every European country.

(o) The USAF provided radio, amphibious vehicles, search lights and rescue equipment.

(p) The BRCS provided about 2,000 First Aid Posts (and treated some 30,000 persons) 14,000 mattresses, 44,000 blankets, 15,000 sheets, 11,000 pillows, 10,000 pillow cases, 10,000 quilts, 6,000 towels and thousands of gifts of varying natures.

(q) The SJAB provided some 2,000 First Aid points and treated up to 35,000 persons and assisted in hundreds of other tasks.

(r) The WRVS served thousands of meals daily to workers and rescued, issued over 3,000,000 garments to flood victims and parcelled 8,000,000 from the excess received.

(s) The AA, RAC, National Council of Social Services, Church organisations, Citizens Advice Bureaux, Womens Institutes, Salvation Army, Church Army, RSPCC, RSPCA, Scouts, Guides and hundreds of other organisations were involved. Lifeboats rescued hundreds and lost many boats.

(t) Finally the Fire Service from all parts of the country, 106 Authorities at that time with some 500 appliances—rescued, pumped out factories, power stations, business premises, warehouses, choked sewers and supplied fresh water.

The Civil Defence Corps (since disbanded), played a large part in all the operations and provided first class leaders in many incidents.

Gifts came from all parts of the World, Appeal Funds provided millions of pounds for relief purposes.

Industry, Commerce, Agriculture were all fully involved.

Lack of communications and co-ordination, at the time of disaster left many acts of heroism unrewarded.

The Cost

To those affected the cost could never be counted. To most who helped, no payments were made. To repair the sea defences cost £27·5 million at 1955 values of which the Government provided £26 million.

What would be the cost of the operation at 1978 values?

The Urges

The annual occurrences since 1976 suggest the truth of the various theories now presented by many climatologists and experts:—

The tides are rising, the gales strengthening.
The country is tilting.
The Polar caps are melting.
The whole "effects" are likely to continue for a considerable period.
The sand cliffs are being eroded at a frightening pace and being carried elsewhere.

The Tasks Involved Now

The Regional Water Authorities (Rivers Divisions) have to heighten and strengthen many of the sea defences; piling, sea wall building etc. must be "on going" for a long period.

The warning periods have been revised, electronic devices are being installed at many points linked to computers. More observers man the defences, in howling gales.

The Police have constantly to revise the warning systems to cope with the different permutations of flooding that can happen each year. Siren systems have had to be placed in operation in all areas of flooding, some "war" ones; some by the Water Authority; others by District Councils.

Maritime Districts have to have co-ordinated plans with the Local police controls, river engineers and all other services.

Assembly points on primary routes into the areas have been nominated. Area Social Services Officers together with Area Education Officers have to be on call in the controls to open up the nominated Rest and Feeding Centres.

Highways Divisional Surveyors and staff have to "stand by" to operate at 4 or 6 hours' notice. Portions of the Fire Services and Ambulance Service, Hospitals, Lifeboats, Transport, Agriculture, Industry and Commerce lie in the danger areas and have to take special precautions to remain operative in all circumstances.

These problems are under constant revision by those concerned.

The Tasks Ahead

To ensure the media, both T.V. and radio reach the public with the warnings, continuously during each tempest.

To have a full knowledge of the whereabouts and usefulness of the Radio Amateurs Emergency Network (RAEN) and those of all private resources, and to give them their specific tasks, in case telephone communications break down.

To inform annually those of the public who live in areas at risk of the dangers and to test the systems frequently.

To educate the public in these areas on what to do to protect their property, if flooding occurs.

To organise issue points for sandbags and to arrange exhibitions of how to lay and use these economically and to most effect.

To ensure that "overbuilding" in "flood plans" of the past, is closely watched.

To ensure that every Local Authority Department has its specific tasks from County to Parish in the disaster planning.

To co-ordinate action within the County and Region to provide mutual assistance.

To ascertain what plans the Central Government have for this now almost "annual event" and which once was of an "occasional" nature.

To involve not only the statutory services, but the whole Voluntary Service "arena"B A Voluntary Service Bureau is of more importance than the Casualty Bureau, in the first instance.

In Conclusion

Without an understanding of the problem, it is impossible to plan effectively.

Without a full integration of everyone into the planning, it will not be a success.

Silence will create apathy. Interest will create activity. Education will give the activity an added impetus.

Inactivity by one Service, Department or Ministry will lead to disaster. The problem is a National one as well as a local one and should be financed as such.

If vital service installations are placed in areas vulnerable to the flooding, adequate protective measures must be planned and "built in" to every such establishment. The growth of population and industry must be matched with a growth in the resources to deal with this ever present danger. Triumph over disaster is no victory, the only victory will be in preventing the disaster and time is no longer on our side.

Finally, I hope I have not bored you. I have tried to bring into focus the immensity of a task that can only be successfully accomplished by the co-ordination, co-operation and involvement of all concerned. The boundaries of help reach out all over Europe.

FOOD AND DRUGS

Review by A. C. Bushnell, MChemA, CChem, FRIC
County Analyst, Lancashire

I propose to digress. Most of the things I grumbled about last year resolved themselves, so I have to spread the net a little wide in order to counterfeit indignation this year.

At a Royal Institute of Chemistry centenary banquet held in Manchester's Town Hall (which was also a hundred years old) in 1977, the president of the institute referred to the short sighted policies of the "Unionocracy" under which we now live. He said that management, engineers and science workers had been reduced to a state of despair amounting almost to total demoralization—and, he said, this state of affairs is found only in Britain. Alistair Mant's book, "The Rise and Fall of the British Manager", suggests that in Britain the Manager was a caste figure which is now being destroyed.

As if to lend authority to that statement, one of the Lancashire laboratory chemists committed suicide in 1977. Only a year to two ago, one of the Somerset analysts did the same. It is not a new phenomenon however, and I'd doubt whether the laboratories are greater places of peril for catching the Depression virus than statistics would show other places to be, were it not that I also found myself committing a sort of social suicide by several times delivering a talk in 1977 called, "Confessions of a Public Analyst".

"Confessions" told among other things, how my father had run away to sea in 1908 or thereabouts, joining a prison-like RN training ship at Ipswich where he received an education which brain-washed him into thinking of himself as a "sailor" until his death in 1974, even though he left RN, having done quite well there, in 1921. The RN insistence upon the difference between Lower Deck and Quarter Deck established the sin of the father which was to be visited upon the son. When I passed a scholarship exam in 1932 or thereabouts, the government of the day said that it would not award free places at grammar schools until the family had been subjected to a means test. The sailor's answer was NO. So my grammar school education was obtained on a choristership. A BBC programme in 1977 revealed that these still exist. I wonder whether the duties are still as extensive as they were.

On leaving school I attended Evening Classes. Freed from church duties, I still could not believe that a day held so many hours. Came the war, and with it, extensive food examination in short-staffed establishments. There were many interruptions caused by bomb damage. There was also a general ostracism because we were often considered to be soft shoed civilians making a fortune out of the war. The fortune was £200 a year (when fully qualified). More qualifications via night classes and several changes of L.G. job later, I found myself married and trying to buy a house in Lancashire, where the solicitor who was trying to arrange a mortgage for me called me "poor".

John Davy has accused scientists of being despicable supervisors. There certainly do remain unsavoury stories about laboratory conditions in Public Analysts' Laboratories. My own most irritating recollections are to do with leave. Lancashire would not allow me to take part of my annual leave for visiting my six year old son whose tonsilectomy had gone wrong in a hospital which allowed parental visits only on Wednesdays. I was refused leave to help my wife when advertisement hoardings had blown down upon her in a storm. At the time when dentists ceased from doing evening surgeries I had to take a whole week's leave in order to have some incomplete treatment finished . . . a matter requiring about half an hour. The then public analyst of Derby used to go around telling his staff that only those people who were unemployable in industry remained in local government. One often wondered why one needed such high qualifications for such jolly conditions of service.

It is interesting to speculate on the function of NALGO in those days. It must have been when NALGO used to say that its aim was a "fully qualified local government officer service".

I wonder how many holders of its diploma now find themselves overtaken by the latter day Hitler Youth which found favour when European monolithogarchy was imposed at the very moment when business was finding that decentralisation was its hope of salvation. Steve Duncan, past president of NALGO, used, every Christmas Eve, on the instruction of the public analyst who would by then have been home for three hours, to telephone Lancashire County

Laboratory at 4.55 pm to make sure that the place was still manned. Later, as Deputy County Analyst I approached NALGO to ask why, when national policy was to pay deputies two thirds of a chief's salary, I was paid only half. The incredible reply was that because NALGO was then negotiating for the principle that three quarters should be paid to deputies, to raise my case at that time would be an embarrassment. In days of "free" education I paid for my son's education. His student grant amounted to £24 per year. Parliament sometimes seems to want to change the contract on local government pension rights, so we shall probably again find an "Except the Common People" clause affecting us.

These memories are not to call for the psalmist's comforters to cry over me, "There, there", but to make two points. The first is that "Discrimination" is not something which only coloured people and people born female know about. The second is that whereas Mr. Healey's threat to squeeze until the pips squeak found general approval, (probably because of the awful bosses of yesteryear) the people he is now in fact squeezing are the ones who have negotiated all the Reward-for-Merit hurdles set up by a past generation of reformers and have suffered all the aches associated with getting over them. It would seem that however a bird acquires canary colour, the sparrows will still peck it to death . . . which is very trying for the sparrow which suffered the dye bath in order to be put so much at risk. There should surely be a law against discrimination against conformists. They are apt to wonder why they alone must work hard in order to receive all the kicks. Why alone, at the time of Local Government Reorganisation did the staff of a closing public analyst's laboratory find itself unable to apply for other Local Government jobs which were then becoming available? It all tended to make D of E Circular 54/77, issued in June, detailing the implementation of the Race Relations Act 1976 (which has provisions similar to those of the Sex Discrimination Act 1975) sound a little discriminatory!

At a Public School where "Confessions" was read, members of staff lamented that the school had been endowed for the sons of professional men, but that professional men could no longer afford the fees. The clean, articulate, alert and well-informed pupils (who-ever's sons they are), are likely to find that daddy's sacrifices will hamper them from sending their own sons and daughters to the same establishment. (Public Schools have now gone Co-Ed).

The local authorities' fellow traveller, the Hospital Service, in 1977 lost the country's last Toxicologist, Dr. Ann Robinson, to Canada, and, at the time of writing, there is a chance that the London Medical Hospital College will close her laboratory. In Lancashire, the mighty army of Administrators decided that the public analyst's staff could not be increased by one member in order to help to deal with all the new legislation . . . but all was not gloom. . . . When Lancashire's public analyst was fined for speeding, thus giving him a socially acceptable criminal record, the local papers' reporting of his fine took much more space than the reporting of Princess Anne's fining for the same offence on the same day. It also seemed to win him a Silver Jubilee Medal, which he analysed and found to be Sterling Silver (silver adulterated with about 8 per cent of copper). He had expected it to be Cupro-nickel. Be re-assured. The medal is still intact. It was analysed by the process used on 9 ct gold Jubilee "Sovereigns" which, without their mint certificate proclaiming them to be 'tokens', were being sold in 1977 at the price of genuine 22 ct gold sovereigns, even though the purchasers were supposed to be aware that no sovereigns were struck in 1977. The department was pleased with its medal. It had believed itself to be totally forgotten until it appeared.

Caveat emptor is a precept which supposes that the consumer ought to know what he is about, so it was a little daunting to read in Sunday Times for 13th November 1977 in an article by James Michael, called "Facts Unfit for the British" that the MAFF does not permit foreign information about unsafe food additives to be made known in Britain. The whole of this present article has been meant to underline the fact that you, the reader, as well as I, the writer, must be a consumer some of the time, and may one day be in the hands of the Northumbria police, in danger of being wheeled out, maybe, like Steve Biko, in possession of a kind of immortality, about having gone hungry, or some such story. Self help may be vital to us all then.

The best place to find a summary of the year's legislation about food, is (despite the remarks made in "Facts Unfit for the British") a publication circulated by the MAFF to the ACC, the AMA the ADC and to Public Analysts, Environmental Health Officers, Trading Standards Officers and to the Association of Sea and Air Port Health Authorities. Its MAFF reference is FS 4812 and it is called LAA/Bulletin. In 1977 I reported that the publication had ceased, but in fact it was delayed by the sheer volume of 1976 legislation, just as all the other summaries were. LAA/Bulletin/10 giving the legislation for 1977 will probably have appeared around April 1978. Printing and distribution do get slower and more expensive as the captains of industry, like ships' captains who no longer may perform weddings at sea and no longer have powers of discipline (even to impose fines) find themselves mere figureheads—Aunt Sallies—set up only to take blame.

Righto, Mr. Healey, I've already made the point. But wait until someone squeezes your pips. You will also find that pips continue to ache even after they have been released from the vice, and I do remember that the death of cartoonist Al Capp in 1977 reminded us that his defence of management (as the part of society which paid all the bills) had resulted in his having been sent to Coventry for twelve years. Britain's imitation of USA could auger ill in Britain too for anyone who fails to hate the correct target at the appointed moment.

A Mary Goldring, speaking on Radio 4 on the 10th November 1977, drew attention to an important reason for the hiatus in space research. The kinds of scientific analyses which would be expected to be necessary for a proper evaluation of materials which may be returned from planets, are simply not available. Back here on earth, while the EEC goes glibly on about standardized methods of analysis for all sorts of esoteric materials connected with food, the MMB was pushing the NIRD into organizing the local authorities into backing a new project for checking the freezing point of raw milk. MMB's interest is both in the avoidance of payment for water and in casting doubts on the criteria taken in assessing retail milks' dilution. At the same time the BS was trying to draft a new standard method for carrying out the determination, and incidentally showing once again that it is none too easy, and that the older method was not safe. It led a Lancaster Professor of Chemistry jokingly to remark that chemists speak only about the determinations they can do. Unfortunately many people speak about determinations they cannot do, and never will be able to do unless public analysing is soon reorganised and with some finance behind it.

A National Sampling Plan for foods was devised in 1977. It was to nobody's credit. The need for national sampling plans has been put into the Ministry's head by the newer breed of food sampling officer, and nobody at the Ministry now stays in one job long enough to understand the objections. The new food sampling officers do not like point-of-sale sampling, which is what the Food and Drugs Act expects. They do not like formal sampling of milks, which is hard work. They do not like persuading butchers to display statutory notices about preservatives and artificial colour in sausages. It is very obvious that they do like walking around factories as 'experts', they do like the idea of taking over Food and Drugs Act Quarterly Reports, they do like attending national meetings, they do like going into print and saying that they can do their own analyses and they do like organizing national sampling schemes. The Ministry encourages them in all of this even to the point of proposing a new Food and Drugs Act despite the fact that inspectors "advice to the trade", so far, has tended to take the form of telling meat products manufacturers the shortcomings in the analytical determinations of soya protein additives so that the manufacturers can sell less meat than they should, and the survey promoters have also shown themselves adept in checking the quality of bulk purchases of whisky by whisky retailers who are at odds with their suppliers. Lancashire Laboratory has analysed several Food and Drugs Act samples which have had nothing to do with the Food and Drugs Act. (There is a danger in the Complaints Samples procedures. Competitors can make life hell for a trader they dislike). The last National Survey, of metallic contamination in fish, as was mentioned in last year's MYB article, succeeded in showing that some laboratories could count themselves lucky if internally they had two operatives who could get similar results. A major part of the problem is sampling, but the statement is also a criticism of analytical procedures. The survey arrangements revealed that not even the analysts who were consulted about the National Sampling Scheme seemed to know that they could not carry out one of the investigations that was called for, namely that of drinks for residual filter-asbestos fibres. The results would not have been meaningful using the equipment that Local Authorities are willing to pay for. The call for surveys is reminiscent of British Leyland's eternal wrangling about Management Structures instead of getting on with making cars, or with Northcote Parkinson's observation that as the British Navy diminished in size the number of officials employed by the Admiralty increased, and that as the British Empire disappeared, the Colonial Office grew. One inspector each could easily keep the present public analysts' laboratories fully occupied. He would need to work at it full time. Much of the bickering across the inspection-laboratory interface arises because neither side knows or understands the other's difficulties. The analyst's difficulty is analysis.

The analytical Civil Servants earned their wages in 1977. They were struggling away with EEC Directives on colouring, preservatives, cocoa, sugars, emulsifiers, fruit juices, preserved milk, soups, poultry meat, euro-beer, eggs, fertilisers, medicines in animal feeds . . . . . . not forgetting, in the year of the Windscale enquiry, a joint report of a FAO/IAEA/WHO Expert Committee (Technical Report Series 604) on the Wholesomeness of Irradiated Food. The Windscale enquiry did reveal that radioactive effluent from Windscale had gone up about threefold, so that the factory was disposing of about 80 per cent of its permitted maximum. It also revealed that there are nineteen Ministry scientists bumbling around in the Irish Sea (or is it the Celtic Sea, now?) taking measurements at a cost equal to the cost of treating the effluent. But if the cost of getting good data is acceptable for the Ministry, why not for the local authorities?

Euro beer was cast out. It was decided not to change the unit of energy on food labels (for the time being) from Calories to Joules. The Sugar Board was dissolved (yuk, yuk) and the Minister of Agriculture then firmly decided that the UK would not be panicked by the Canadian research results which had led the USA to discontinue the use of saccharin as a food additive and then provisionally to allow it again, mainly for diabetics (who eat most saccharin!)

The major food legislation of the year must probably include a mention of the Cocoa and Chocolate Products Regulations of last year, if only to note that the regulations are less restricting than was expected. Regulation 4 not only prohibits the application of reserved descriptions, but provides some exceptions to the rule. The word 'chocolate' can be used in some unexpected circumstances, and the word 'Choc' is also less restricted than at first it seemed to be, but when used, a true description of the coatings which may give rise to the 'Choc' designation is also required. When considering a "chocolate sponge" which is clearly not a chocolate product, one needs to pay more attention to the labelling regulations and to the LAJAC Code of Practice than to the new regulations. Where a "Chocolate Eclair" comes into the story remains rather obscure.

The Erucic Acid in Food Regulations 1977 appear to be more complicated than they seemed at first sight. The problem arises in the definition of Erucic Acid as the cis-dicos 13 enoic acid, and a great deal of work was going on in 1977 to provide a means of separating this acid from the related acids, which, one suspects, may have a very comparable effect physiologically. One could, as with mercury, express doubts. Surely all the mercury vapour from dental fillings is being turned into methyl mercury by the bacteria in the stomach and intestines? As we don't know, however, perhaps one should similarly withhold comment about Erucic Acid.

The Condensed Milk and Dried Milk Regulations should cause no trouble except for the crossing over of established usage relating to condensed and evaporated milk designations.

The Fruit Juices and Fruit Nectars Regulations would appear to have much in common with the cocoa regulations inasmuch as one needs to consider carefully under what circumstances reserved descriptions may NOT be required. The number of permitted additives suddenly make fruit juice seem a very complicated commodity.

The way the legislation is now tied in with Europe has meant that paper has come and gone on matters such as antioxidants, sulphur dioxide as an alternative to artificial colour in canned peas, the EEC proposed limits for Vinyl chloride monomer in materials in which foods may be packed (and they suggested limit of 0·05 part per million in food itself), the number of coffee products available in the UK compared with Europe, and the need to add an Appropriate Designation to sugar sold as Demerara Sugar. Alternative sweeteners to sucrose and saccharin came under discussion (particularly in connection with fructose and the fructose preparation which nearly became known as "Iso glucose syrup"). Soup and broth came under discussion again and Emulsifiers and Stabilisers continued to need further consideration. The whole picture seemed to be captured by ONLOOKER in PJ for 21st May 1977 on page 417 where he asked, "Why can dog food be produced so much more cleaply than the foods for humans?" The answer was given by Peter Moore, the newly elected president of the National Food and Drink Federation. "The consumer also pays for the legislation", he said.

The analysts read the Food Standards Committee Report on Beer, struggled with the Fertilisers Regulations 1977, read the Ministry 'Guide to the Methods of Analysis Contained in Schedule 5 of the Fertilisers and Feeding Stuffs (Amendment) Regulations 1976, ran into trouble with the drug AVOTAN which began to be used in animal feeding stuffs before a printers' strike permitted it to be included in the "Compendium of Medicinal Feed Additives", boggled at The Fertilisers and Feeding Stuffs (Amendment) Regulations 1977 and sighed over the Medicines (Animal Feeding Stuffs) (Enforcement) (Amendment) Regulations 1977. They saw that there was a new BP Addendum and a new British Veterinary Pharmacopoeia, wrote on a shirt cuff that PJ 1977 July p 55 summarised the new Medicines Act labelling regulations (as amended), looked at the Control of Pollution Act documents, and concluded thankfully that there had been hardly any legislation in 1977, thank goodness!

The respite gave even analysts time to note other snippets of 1977's news. Thus on 1st July artificial cigarettes were introduced and on 7th October most of them were burned again. At the TUC Annual Conference the Transport and General Workers Union was democratically suspended and then restored by legerdemain. French became the official language of Quebec and Esquimaux rioted in protest. The following announcements were made: (1) from July 1976 to July 1977 prices went up twice as much as earnings, (2) more people died on the roads in 1935 than in 1976, (3) the House of Commons declared 22nd June 1977 non existent, (4) the duty on alcoholic drinks sold in Britain was stated to have paid for the National Health Services, (5) the average Briton was said to have paid more in tax than he spent on food, (6) more people died in Britain than were born. In addition to being the Queen's Silver Jubilee Year and the 25th Anniversary of "The Mouse Trap", it was World Rheumatism Year, Prisoners of Conscience Year. International Animal Year, Export Year, the Centenary Year of the Royal Institute of Chemistry, of Wimbledon Lawn Tennis, of St. John's Ambulance, of Boots (Chemists) and of the Diocese of Truro whose saints include a St. Evil.

It is often said that to be a complete bore one should tell all, but in 1977 one could not possibly tell all. It was such an extraordinary year that it will not matter even that in it I have written my own obituary . . . . . Well . . . . the first half of it, D.V.

The Council was set up on 1st January 1973, under the provisions of the Gas Act, 1972. The Secretary of State for Energy appointed a Chairman and a Deputy Chairman; the Membership was formed by the appointment of the 12 Chairmen of the Regional Gas Consumers' Councils and 12 members chosen for their particular experience and background. Other members may be appointed as required.

TRADING STANDARDS/CONSUMER PROTECTION

Review by J. J. CORFIELD, MITSA

Assistant Press Officer, Institute of Trading Standards Administration

The desire for consumer protection and fair competition in trading is not new, the first recorded law on weights and measures is dated A.D. 965, during the reign of King Edgar. It was then enacted that only one weight and one measure should pass throughout the King's dominion. Probably the most well known early reference is the Magna Carta, when King John laid down that there should be one measure for wine, one measure for ale and one measure for corn throughout the realm, "and it shall be of weight as it is of measure".

Slowly standards developed over the years, rapidly increasing with the industrial revolution, although always, and indeed to-day the maximum "caveat emptor" or "buyer beware" was and still is the general rule. That trading practices have been improved over the years is beyond doubt and some of the credit for this success must go to Local Authorities and Officers in their Trading Standards/Consumer Protection Departments, whose job it has been to enforce the legislation brought about by consumer and trade pressures. Formerly this work was carried out by Weights and Measures Departments, who were renamed Trading Standards Departments or Consumer Protection Departments, to more accurately reflect the wide range of duties performed.

In recent years the term Consumer Protection has been used, and perhaps in its widest interpretation is not out of place. Emerson once said "Every man is a consumer and ought to be a producer". To-days economists might not put it any better but the truth really is that every producer, every retailer and every advertiser is also a consumer. Something is used, consumed in the doing of that business. Recently though the term consumer protection has received not altogether favourable comment. Such phrases as "consumer protection is a growth area"; "consumer protection is extravagant unnecessary bureaucratic interference" and so on appear before us from time to time.

In one sense the term "consumer protection" is unfortunate since it conveys little of the true nature of the function and over-emphasizes paternalistic, bureaucratic overtones with disdain by much of the media.

When human societies move from more primitive structures into the development of a market economy, thousands of years of history show that certain functions become basic to their progress—police, military and trading standards. In the United Kingdom the latter function has developed over 700 years by dual use of both common and statute law, which was codified and rationalized in its contemporary form during the 19th century. The Weights and Measures, Food and Drugs, Trade Descriptions, Petroleum and many other existing statutes are direct successors to criminal legislation of the Victorian era, whilst the Sale of Goods Act 1893 remains the basis to this day of the rules and obligations to which a supplier of goods must conform in fulfilling a contract—unless, of course, varied by agreement of both parties.

Mis-named "consumer protection", therefore, is not a social welfare service, as many of to-day's critics infer but a function essential for the existence of fair trading and fair competition, as well as playing a significant role in competition policy. Those who question this might analyse as one example the approach (not necessarily the methods!) of the European Commission towards the freezing of trade and the elimination of barriers between member states. The maintenance of equity and fairness in the market place is fundamental for as Adam Smith himself reminded us, even in the 18th century the economic powers of production constantly sought to destroy the market and the superior role of consumption. So it still is to-day through the influences of both manufacturer and marketer in the supply of goods and services.

In delineating the basic role of consumer protection in a market economy, note needs to be taken of how it operates in the United Kingdom by a combination of criminal and civil law. Until the last few years, only the criminal structure operated as a general public service whilst the civil side languished, frequently and disdainfully ignored by suppliers, who were protected from fulfilling their legal obligations by the procedural difficulties and expense of mounting an individual action for redress against them. Justified complaints went uncorrected creating areas of unfair competition with substantial benefit to the suppliers concerned, whilst diminishing equally recognition of legal requirements and the principle of equity in the market.

In Great Britain, services of this kind, both enforcement and assistance, are based within local government. Before reorganization in 1974 the functions were assigned to a large variety of different authorities, some determined by size of population, some by designation of type e.g. counties, boroughs etc. Since 1974, in England and Wales the responsibilities lie with the counties and London Boroughs and in Scotland with the regional and island authorities. Overall, there has been a massive contraction in the number of authorities and departments involved, leading to the development of comprehensive trading standards services within the new authorities. In many cases there has been developed much greater uniformity in enforcement of legal requirements and assistance for individuals to secure civil redress for justified complaints—which becomes painful for those suppliers of goods and services previously indifferent to these obligations.

And so to the thorny question of costs and cost effectiveness. Before 1974 the elements of consumer services' costs were formed from a combination of returns from several hundred local authorities, many so insignificant that they had to be rounded off to secure minimum recognition. Based primarily on returns for Weights and Measures Departments, the national cost for England and Wales in 1973/74 was estimated at about £15½ million. On reorganization functions transferred from other authorities or departments in to the new county authorities increased the current work-load by between 25% and 30%—but establishments remain based on those of the old Weights and Measures Departments. Relevant expenditure under the Rate Support Grant for 1977/78 is shown in the Public Expenditure White Paper—Cmd. as £20·9 million with a further £2·7 million approximately out of the Advice Centre Grant of £3 million for the whole of Great Britain.

It is worth remarking that the combined figure of £23·6 million covers all enforcement and advice expenditure incurred by local authorities on consumer services. If the inflation facctor over the same period in the Rate Support Grant is taken as 60%, the 1973/74 expenditure of £15½ million would now be £24·8 miilion. Far from being a tremenndous and unnacceptable growth function, the total cost of enforcement and advice duties in current terms is LESS than equivalent expenditure on the old Weights and Meaasures Departments alone, notwithstanding the increase in functions. To complete the picture, it must be remembered that current vacancies total more than one-sixth of the total establishment (nearly 300 out of a total of 1700), this total having been already reduced by over 200 posts since 1974. Compared with 1974, therefore, these factors show a massive reduction in the standards of some aspects of consumer protection, particularly in regard to observance of statutory enforcement, with a consequent increase in complaints and a deterioration of good trading practice.

Comments about the extravagance of assistance to individual civil complainants are rarely influenced by facts or by the fundamental legal status of the operation. The Director General of Fair Trading estimates the cost to the consumer of dealing with a complaint as about £8. Taking the experience of one of the largest authorities, the actual cost of an individual complaint handled by the department, including all the factors listed by the Director General, in 1976 was approximately £4·50p. The important factors in this concern the assessment of redress, which is between 3 to 3½ times the average cost of each inquiry. If, as other reports suggest, apart from complaints dealt with directly by customer with trader, only about 1 in 25 of other justified complaints reach the official machinery in some form or other, the implications for fair trading, fair competition and equity within the market are very disturbing. It is small wonder, with millions of pounds of redress or compensation, potentially due, that hostility to the operation is described in terms of mythically extravagant costs and curt disdain for suggested problems of the consumer.

Administration of the service is the responsiblity of, in England six Metropolitan Counties, 39 County Councils, 23 London Authorities or Consortiums, 8 Welsh Counties and 12 Scottish Authorities, a total of 88 compared against 241 prior to re-organization.

The following table gives a breakdown of the main legislation administered by these authorities:

The service provided varies between Local Authorities but generally the work of most Trading Standards/Consumer Protection Departments can be broadly divided into five main areas of control or responsibility:

(a) Metrology and quantity control,
(b) Controls over quality and performance of goods and services,
(c) Safety and licensing controls,
(d) Controls over consumer credit and price information, and
(e) Responsibility for giving information and advice to consumers and the trade.

Metrology and Quantity Controls

For many years Weights and Measures law has limited the range of weights and measures units, and the denomination of physical weights and measures, which can be used for trading purposes, and it has applied a tight system of supervisory control over the design, construction and accuracy of a wide range of weighing and measuring equipment in use for trade. These controls are aimed at providing a balance of equity between buyer and seller in transactions made by reference to quantity and the current universal acceptance by all sides of the correctness of weighing equipment in trade use is ample testimony to the success of this control policy and to the way it has been enforced by Trading Standards Officers over the years. Such controls also make it an offence to give short weight, measure or number in transactions for the sale of goods.

The enforcement of the Weights and Measures Acts of 1963 and 1976—the main instruments of control—and the voluminous regulations made for effective control is one of the major functions of consumer protection and is the basis for the maintenance of standards of quantity which are just as essential to the trading community as to the consumer.

Because of the pressure of other duties and increased fair trading standard legislation being placed upon local Weights and Measures Authorities, there is a continuing decline in preventive work in the form of inspection visits to trading premises. The high standards of inspection that existed over many years prior to April, 1974, has prevented drastic reductions in trading standards in the short term. On a longer term the reduction in Inspector/Trader contact, particularly in relation to the Inspectors advisory role, will result in a general lowering of standards and increase in complaints.

There is increased activity in changing to the metric system. Voluntary changes have been made in industrial materials, construction, plastics, engineering, farming and education, with nearly 100% import/export business in metric terms. A report presented to Parliament in 1977 indicates a series of target dates, in a National programme, for completing the metric change. The target for the final phase being in 1980/81. For prescribed quantity and most other goods the report envisages completion by the end of 1979. Orders have already been approved by Parliament requiring certain pre-packed goods such as sugar, biscuits, tea and bread to be made up only in metric quantities. Whilst a 1981 target date is planned for food weighed out in front of the customer by butchers, fishmongers, fruiterers and greengrocers.

These changes together with those taking place under EEC legislation, such as average weight directives, dual weight marking of goods and for example one of the earliest sets of Regulations controlling the pre-packaging and labelling of wine and grape must, have already placed and will continue to place an even heavier burden upon local authorities and officers in their Trading Standards Departments.

Quality Controls

Quality, performance and reliability of goods and services is just as important to a contract as quantity and price. This generalized trading broadly covers enforcement activities under the Food and Drugs; Trade Description; Agriculture; and Hallmarking Acts.

Enforcement of the Trade Description Acts 1968 and 1972 continues to be largely a matter of dealing with complaints from the public and trade organizations and it is probably true to say that the bulk of Trading Standards Officers time is still taken up on investigating such complaints. The Trade Descriptions Acts prohibit the misdescription of goods or the making of false or reckless statements about services during the course of the trade transaction. The Acts are under review, and whilst it has been agreed that by and large the 1968 Act achieved its objectives in clearly raising the standard of truthfulness in describing goods and services, it is anticipated further legislation will be introduced with further controls on services.

Food and Drugs Legislation, at present under review, seeks to control the standard, composition, purity and accuracy of description of human foods and food products. These controls have two basic objectives, to safeguard public against the hazards of unfit, unclean, contaminated or adulterated food and to protect the public from the economic aspects, in terms of "value for money spent" which can accrue as a consequence of false or misleading statements about, or false or deceptive descriptions of, food generally. Many basic foods are required to conform to standard specifications and in an age when food products are becoming increasingly sophisticated in composition and presentation, effective enforcement of these standards is of considerable importance.

Legislation also controls quality and effectiveness of animal feeding stuffs and fertilizers, for example it is necessary for such commodities to bear the statement of quality and medicinal and other additives. Controls under the Hallmarking Act 1973, deal with the composition, assaying, marking and description of articles made of precious metals.

Safety and Licensing Controls

Whilst it is well known the contribution Trading Standards Officers/Consumer Protection Officers make to the economic well-being of the community through the enforcement of fair trading legislation, what is perhaps not so well known, is the contribution such officers make to consumer safety and safety in the community. Enforcement can be broadly divided into three main areas of control: Safety in the Home; Safety on the Highway; and Safety in Industry.

Child safety and safety in the home form an important part of the Trading Standards Officers work. Such aspects, controlled by the Consumer Protection Act, include the stability and safety of such equipment as carry-cot stands, oil heaters and guards on heating appliances, the toxicity of toys and pencils, the toxic materials that may escape into food drinks from ceramics and cooking pots, the flammability of night attire and the risks to young children from strangulation by hood cords on anoraks or from hazards of toys with sharp metal edges, spikes or removable attachments such as doll's eyes. Specifications are laid down for electrical equipment used in the home. Included is the colouring of mains leads to appliances, safety standards applicable to electric blankets and to all domestic electrical equipment.

Under discussion is the Consumer Safety Bill which contains many proposals from the Government Green Paper. The Bill seeks to remedy deficiencies in present legislation by providing a framework for more flexible and positive action to safeguard the consumer against dangerous goods and to enable the provision of minimum safety standards.

Trading Standards Officers are also concerned with the storage and sale of what may be termed "household poisons", as well as agricultural and horticultural goods containing poison. Consideration of safety standards in the home is an on-going function, for example the latest are regulations to control the standards of babies' dummies, perambulators and pushchairs, oil lamps and aerosol containers.

Safety controls on the highway are contained in the Road Traffic Acts which sets out the permitted weights transmitted to the road surface by heavy goods vehicles, enforcement of which is the duty of the Trading Standards Officer. Excessive weights create a safety hazard in reducing braking efficiency, can produce unsafe loads and cause undue wear and tear on roads and bridges. This legislation equally applies to foreign vehicles. The same legislation makes it an offence to sell a vehicle which is unroadworthy and likely to cause danger on the highway. Strict standards are also applied to the design of motor cycle helmets. Controls also cover the carriage of petroleum, and dangerous or corrosive substances on the highway, requiring in most cases a rigid specification of tanker design and construction together with appropriate designated danger markings.

Safety controls in industry include the licensing of premises and the enforcing of strict storage conditions, cover the safe handling and storage of petroleum spirit, mixtures and liquefied natural gas, at the filling station and industrial premises. Other controls cover the safe storage and handling of explosives and gunpowder in industry and retail outlets, necessitating the registration of premises. The storage of explosives for industrial use at mines and quarries etc., is particularly stringent because of the nature of the explosives stored and the quantities involved. At the present time as much attention has to be paid to security as to safety and most authorities have a regular liaison with the constabulary to achieve this objective. In addition markets are supervised and outbreaks of disease require a prompt liaison with the Ministry of Agriculture officials. Of major concern is the tight control on animal importation to prevent the introduction into the country of Rabies. Many departments are now authorised to carry out these duties and the tracing of illegal imports and the supervision of entry ports or possible sources of entry, particularly during holiday times, is of increasing importance.

Consumer Credit Facilities and Price Information

Price Regulations, together with prohibition of the giving of false or misleading indications as to the price of goods, provides the consumer with increased protection. Trading Standards Officers have been involved with the enforcement of the Prices Act 1974—which contains stiff penalties with up to £400 for contravention—and a number of Orders controlling prices of certain food and price display of petrol, food and drinks, and certain classes of goods and services. Government activity in this area sees an extension of the existing legislation on unit pricing. A number of basic foods have been the subject of unit price control.

Credit facilities are also the subject of controls which include a licensing system for traders providing credit, and are designed to give greater protection to borrowers. Such controls are contained in the Consumer Credit Act of 1974, an Act to establish for the protection of consumers a new system of licensing and other control of traders concerned with the provision of credit or the supply of goods on hire or hire purchase and their transaction in place of the previous enactments regulating money lenders, pawn brokers and hire purchase traders and their transactions. It is an offence to carry on in the business of debt adjusting, debt counselling, debt collecting or operating a credit reference agency without a licence issued by the Office of Fair Trading. All consumer credit and hiring businesses must possess a licence.

Further Regulations have been made controlling extortionate credit bargains, credit reference agencies, and some aspects of door step canvassing including circulars to minors and unsolicited credit tokens. Regulations also make provision for ascertaining the true cost to debtors for the credit provided.

Following full implementation of the Act and Regulations, Consumers will be able to shop around for credit and compare like with like and choose that form of credit most suitable for their particular need. Trading Standards Officers, working in close liaison with the Office of Fair Trading, have had and will continue to have a substantial part to play in the enforcement, consultation on licensing applications, inspections, handling of complaints from, and giving advice to consumers.

A detailed training programme has been taking place to meet the enforcement needs of this important reform in the huge complex field of consumer credit law. This legislation having undoubted benefits not only to the consumer but to the credit industry too.

Over the last two years, consumers have been given prices information from local price surveys carried out, some by Local Authorities, under a Department of Prices and Consumer Protection scheme. Over 280 such schemes throughout the country have been approved.

Fair Trading Enforcement and Advice

Enforcement of these laws, is of course, the first objective of the service. The latest figures available show some 6,795 cases with some 14,869 informations being laid thoughout the UK.

Many times that number of offences are for a variety of reasons dealt with by action falling short of criminal prosecution. At one time it was considered sufficient if officers simply detected offences and then prosecuted the offenders before the Court. In recent years a more enlightened attitude towards enforcement has developed, which, while retaining prosecutions as a final sanction against recalcitrant offenders, recognises that the majority of offences against standards legislation are committed either through misunderstanding or misinterpretation of complex laws or through carelessness. The trend now is to offer counsel and advice to traders and to manufacturers to prevent offences being committed. In cases, when offences have already occurred to issue warnings, usually with a time limit attached for the offender to come into line with the law. Nevertheless situations do occur where it is necessary to institute legal proceedings. In general every effort is made to protect the consumer and protect the goodwill of the trader or manufacturer. For these reasons a great deal of the success of the service depends upon the maintenance of mutual respect and a good relationship between its officers and the traders.

Probably one of the most important areas of development within Local Authorities has been in communications, the very desirous need to keep the community informed of the Local Authority activities. The Local Government Act of 1972 enables local Weights and Measures Authorities to provide or contribute towards a consumer advice service in their area to inform the consumer of his rights, in some cases give preshopping information and ensure a service for complaints and enquiries about goods and services. (1,055,398 in 1977). There are now some 99 such centres in England and Wales, estimated to cover approximately 40% of the population. In most instances advice centres have been situated within large shopping areas, however in several authorities mobile advice centres visit at pre-arranged times, a county's smaller market towns and villages.

Education, Training and Recruitment

The Institute of Trading Standards Administration, the professional organisation for officers of the service, aims to advance the legal, technical, scientific, practical and general knowledge of persons engaged in the administration of legislation relative to fair trading, consumer protection and advice to consumers and traders. It has always played a major part in the training programme for qualification, and in recent years has sponsored most post qualification training courses. It has been particularly active over the last four years, organising courses and training programmes for officers meeting the enforcement needs of all the new legislation placed on the service.

Most authorities are now recruiting a mixed entry of graduates and non graduates as trainees. A graduate with a good degree in a discipline with some relevance to the studies to be undertaken stands the best chance of passing the necessary examinations in reasonable time.

The Diploma in Trading Standards is a comprehensive qualification covering the majority of work undertaken in Trading Standards Departments. It includes within it the statutory qualifications which are required before anyone can act as an Inspector of Weights and Measures. It is a two part examination and the first part must be obtained before the second can be attempted. The subjects include a detailed consideration of both criminal and civil law relating to consumer protection, metrology and the technology relating to goods and services commonly supplied to consumers, statistics, trading practices, practical aspects of enforcement and the provision of advice. The examination includes practical work, the submission of an extended essay on a project and an oral examination.

A secondary qualification is the Diploma in Consumer Affairs, this is also a two part examination and covers consumer protection law, the basis of trading within the community, the problems likely to arise from purchases, the way in which consumer protection is organised through statutory and voluntary bodies, standards of trading and advertising and the problems and practice of giving consumer advice.

A third qualification—Diploma in Public Safety—is at present under discussion, the suggested Diploma being in four parts to cover petroleum, explosives, household goods and finally diseases of animals.

The UK System—Second to None

Speaking at the first open day of the refurbished Weights and Measures Laboratory in Chapter Street, London SW1, Mr Roy Hattersley, Secretary of State for Prices and Consumer Protection, said:—

> "The arrangements for the control of legal metrology are a prime example of the close co-operation that exists between central and local government in the consumer protection field in this country. Indeed, the Weights and Measures Act 1963 and its predecessors form the cornerstone upon which much of our subsequent consumer protection legislation has been built.
> Weights and measures legislation established the weights and measures authorities; the professionalism their officers showed in carrying out their duties made them the obvious choice of enforcement agency. This arrangement, with central government and Parliament providing the legislation, and local government, with its local accountability and responsiveness to local needs, providing the enforcement, has proved a very successful combination."

INSTITUTE OF TRADING STANDARDS ADMINISTRATION

Estate Hse., 319D London Rd., Hadleigh, Benfleet, Essex, SS7 2BN

Trading Standards Officers are employed by local authorities throughout the United Kingdom (except in Northern Ireland where they are retained by the Department of Commerce) to enforce that area of criminal law concerned with standards of fair trading, safety, quality and quantity. In addition many local authorities' officers provide advice and educational services to consumers and traders.

The Institute exists to promote the knowledge and training of its members; to advise government on necessary and desirable developments in pertinent legislation; to liaise with local authority associations on matters affecting the professional activities of its members; to liaise with trade associations on matters of mutual interest and to provide lectures and courses for both its members and trade associations on relevant matters. In pursuit of these objectives the Institute holds an annual conference, publishes a journal "The Monthly Review" and organises many training courses and seminars each year. Current membership is approximately 1,800, which is about 100% of those eligible.

Under their former title of "Inspectors of Weights and Measures", members of the Institute first formed a professional body in 1894 called "The Incorporated Society of Inspectors of Weights and Measures". To reflect more properly the current duties of its members the present name was adopted in 1972.

CONSUMER ADVICE CENTRES

These Centres are normally staffed by trained consumer advisers liaising with the local authority Trading Standards Department. Services offered include information and display lists about local prices, pre-shopping advice, help with all kinds of consumer problems, advice about consumers' rights and consumer education.

By way of expanding the service, towards the end of 1975 the Government made available additional finance totalling £1·4m. This sum of money was used to set up new approved centres and for running expenses up to March 1977.

In 1977–78 the Government made a grant of £3m available to local authorities in Great Britain to maintain the coverage of consumer advice centres. A further capital grant of £300,000 for setting up new centres and improving existing premises was approved in 1978. In a written answer in Parliament on 22nd February 1978, the Secretary of State for Prices and Consumer Protection stated that his Department received 46 applications, and with the funds available 28 of these were approved, all but two of which were for new centres.

Approximately £3·5m will be available for the running expenses of all approved consumer advice centres in 1978–79.

In April 1978 the Department of Prices and Consumer Protection indicated that the following local authorities had approved consumer advice centres in operation as at 1st April 1978. (m indicating a mobile unit)

MUSEUMS AND GALLERIES 1977–8

Review contributed by THE MUSEUMS ASSOCIATION

Continuing economic restraint has affected the provision of museum services in both national and local government museums. It is gratifying to report that, despite these restrictions, developments have proceeded in a number of museums. The search for alternative forms of funding has grown and a number of enterprising schemes have been initiated. For example, an expensive, illustrated catalogue of Creamware and other English Pottery in Leeds City Art Galleries was published, its initial costs having been underwritten by a number of sponsors. A donation of £20,000 made through the Friends of the City of York Art Gallery towards the initial capital costs has assured the future of the extension into the former Art School premises and Doncaster Museum and Art Gallery opened a permanent exhibition of Masterpieces of European Art in the galleries previously used for temporary exhibitions from the V & A Museum, which included a number of loans from the art collections of British Rail Pension Fund. Among other new projects, Bristol opened its new Industrial Museum in a converted dockside warehouse at Princes's Wharf, Manchester Museum extension was completed, Nottingham opened its Brewhouse Yard museum below the Castle and the National Maritime Museum opened the refurbished West Wing Galleries in December 1977, the last but one stage in its major redevelopment programme.

In Glasgow, the first sod was turned by HM Princess Margaret on 3 May 1978 marking the construction of the building to house the Burrell Collections, at a cost of £12·3 million, 50% being offered by central government. Negotiations are still continuing on the £1 million p.a. running costs, it seems likely however that Strathclyde Regional Council will offer to meet a quarter of these costs in exchange for participation in the management of the Gallery and a guarantee that no admission charges will be made. Conversely, Staffordshire County Council and Stoke-on-Trent District Council have terminated the arrangement whereby the ownership and management of the newly-built City Museum and Art Gallery would have been transferred to the county on completion. The District Council will retain the museum and occupation will take place over a staged programme.

A report on the use of Job Creation manpower in museums published in Museums Journal Vol. 77.4 (March 1978) drew attention to the productive and stimulating schemes which have been undertaken ranging from site clearance to visitor surveys, the mounting of new circulating exhibitions, preparation of educational kits to cataloguing of collections and schemes. Details of some 400 projects involving over 60 museums were collected and it is likely that many more schemes, not reported, have been in progress. Various drawbacks were recorded, not least the variable quality of the manpower available and the security risks that developed, but for most museums it has provided a much needed boost to their chronically under-staffed situation and assisted with the backlog of projects to be completed. It is hoped that the Work Experience and other youth employment schemes introduced in 1978 will prove of additional benefit.

The well-publicized crisis over the fate of Mentmore and its contents resulted in the Commons Select Committee on Expenditure, Environment Sub Committee setting up an enquiry into the purpose and operations of the National Land Fund, with particular reference to public expenditure. The Museums Association and the Standing Commission on Museums and Galleries, among many amenity and heritage groups, submitted written evidence and were later examined orally together. The findings and recommendations of the Enquiry are awaited.

The growing risk to works of art and objects of national heritage by exports was highlighted by the dramatic fight to raise funds to purchase a pair of Stubbs paintings for the Tate Gallery at a cost of £900,000, the Bellini 'Mother and Child enthroned with angels' from Cornbury Park, for which Birmingham City Museum and Art Gallery had to find £400,000, the Gainsborough portrait of 'Ben Truman' and the pair of 16th century silver flagons of the Mostyn family saved from export by Leeds City Art Gallery and Manchester City Art Gallery at a cost of £35,000 each. Still in doubt are the fine series of Caneletto's views of Warwick Castle for which sale prices of £¼ million each for export abroad have been completed. The Tate Gallery launched a major fundraising campaign, including lotteries and other activities, on behalf of the Stubbs and for the Gainsborough portrait has had to commit a major proportion of its annual purchase fund. Although the Government announced a supplementary vote of £1 million in 1978/9 and £2 million in 1977/8 for purchases by national museums and galleries, many feel that more radical measures are required if a continuing series of crises are not to occur. A heritage contingency fund has for many years been advocated from which both national and provincial museums could apply for special grants and it is hoped that the Commons enquiry will recommend a scheme along such lines.

In July 1977, the Government announced an extension in the indemnity scheme for the collections of the national museums and galleries to cover long-term loans to local authority and university museums which satisfied the requisite security and curatorial levels. A limit of £$\frac{1}{2}$ million is imposed on the value of loans to an individual institution and the borrowing museum has to agree to meet a minimum liability, starting at £100 on a sliding scale related to the value, for loss or reparable damage. This waiving of the insurance premiums previously imposed has been greatly welcomed although provincial museums still face heavy insurance costs for material lent by private owners and other sources for temporary exhibitions. The Museums Association set up a working party which included a representative of a Lloyds insurance brokers and a local government insurance expert to prepare Guidelines on Insurance and Risk Management (Information Sheet No. 23 available shortly) and further discussions are in progress for special museum cover.

No progress can yet be reported on the negotiations to provide alternative sources of circulating exhibitions to replace the programme which the V & A Museum had administered for over 100 years and which was terminated in 1977 when the Museum's Department of Regional Services was closed down in order to effect the manpower cuts in the civil service. The Standing Commission on Museums and Galleries organized a 1$\frac{1}{2}$ day conference in Leicester in July 1977 attended by representatives of the national museums and galleries, the Arts Council, the Area Museum Councils, the local authority associations and the Museums Association and discussions have continued since between groups of national museums, major provincial institutions and the Arts Council on the organization and distribution of material, including touring versions of temporary exhibitions mounted 'in house' by the bigger museums. The dominant factor remains the availability of finance and staff, particularly to replace the middle level of exhibitions which the V & A Museum programme previously supplied.

The Treasury announced the following grants in aid for 1978/9. British Museum, £6,311,000; British Museum (Natural History), £4,335,000; Science Museum, £3,395,000; Victoria and Albert Museum, £4,881,000; Imperial War Museum, £2,056,000; National Gallery, £3,177,000; National Maritime Museum, £2,049,000; National Portrait Gallery, £969,000; Tate Gallery, £2,766,000; Wallace Collection, £369,000; Sir John Soane's Museum, £80,000 and the Museum of London, £971,000 this grant representing the Government's third of the total expenditure shared equally with the City of London and the Greater London Council. The grants to the V & A Museum and the Science Museum include the funds which they administer for purchases by local museums respectively in the arts and the scientific field. Indeed the purchase grants both to national institutions and for local museums have risen by an average 75% if one includes the extra £1 million which the Chancellor of the Exchequer promised to make available to save the national heritage and augment the resources to meet anticipated increases in sales.

The share of this sum to local museums has resulted in an increase in the V & A Museum fund from £450,000 to £823,000 and for the Science Museum fund from £63,000 to £81,000. The grants to the six Area Museum Councils in England also showed a handsome increase from £900,000 to £1,150,000. In Scotland, the grants were: to the National Galleries of Scotland, £1,152,000; National Museum of Antiquities of Scotland, £399,000; Royal Scottish Museum, £971,980; Council of Museums & Galleries in Scotland, £125,000 and to the grants-in-aid for purchases by local museums, £57,000 (arts), and £7,000 (sciences). In Wales, the National Museum of Wales received a grant of £3,067,000 and the Council of Museums in Wales, £50,000.

The Museum Documentation Association is supported by the subscriptions made through the Area Museum Councils and those national museums which are members. Since its formation early in 1977, the organization has promoted the adoption and use of the IRGMA record cards, some 300,000 cards having been ordered each year by member museums. New cards have been prepared for military artefacts, for conservation and for locality recording and work is in progress on recording conventions for costume, ethnography and photographs. The GOS package is now nearing completion, sample tests of the program having been undertaken on two types of data, the pictorial collections of the Science Museum and the mineral collections of the Ulster Museum. The MDA Advisory Unit issues a quarterly Newsheet, a monthly information circular for users and occasional reports. Seminars are held throughout the country and the unit has provided technical advice on a number of documentation projects. Further information can be obtained from the MDA Unit, Duxford Airfield, Duxford, Cambs., CB2 4QR. The growth in the documentation responsibilities of museums, led to a resolution at the Museums Association AGM in July 1977 calling for environmental record centres to be established on a county-wide basis, wherever possible in the appropriate museum service, and urging the Association to be responsible for the co-ordination of interdisciplinary recording in liaison with the existing national organizations such as the Biological Records Centre and the National Monuments Record.

Also adopted at the Association's AGM were the Code of Practice for Museum Authorities and the Guidelines for Professional Conduct which had been circulated to all members in draft form in the previous year. These documents have been endorsed by the Standing Commission on Museums and Galleries and the Code has been lodged with the Council of Europe and the International Council of Museums.

An interesting development in the Museum of the Year award scheme took place during 1977 when the competition pioneered in the UK by National Heritage with the sponsorship of the Illustrated London News was extended to Europe and a European award under the auspices of the Council of Europe and the EEC was inaugurated. The winner of the British award in 1977, Ironbridge Gorge Museum, went on to become winner of the European award. At the presentation ceremony, Mr Roy Jenkins announced the initiation of a project for 'European Rooms' in which material illustrating the common cultural heritage would be shown, the first exhibition being held at the Castle Museum, Norwich.

A total of 21 million people visited the national museums and galleries in 1977 and record attendance figures have been recorded at many provincial institutions; indeed more people visit art galleries and museums in Glasgow than go to football matches. The important part which museums, galleries and historic houses play in attracting tourism to this country is gradually being recognised and it is hoped that further investment in their maintenance and development will take place. Details of local government expenditure on museums and galleries can be obtained in the Leisure and Recreation Estimates prepared annually by CIPFA Statistical Information Service, the figure for 1976–7 amounting to £19 million.

In September 1977, the Labour Party published its Policy for the Arts, The Arts and the People advocating a Ministry for the Arts, Entertainment and Communications to which a Museums and Galleries Council, responsible for allocating funds to provincial institutions, would report. Proposals for a National Museums Council have beeen recommended in the evidence submitted by the Museums Association and many other organizations to the Working Party on a National Plan for Museums, under the chairmanship of Sir Arthur Drew, whose report reviewing the recommendations of the Wright Report on Provincial Museums and Galleries (HMSO 1973) will be presented to the Standing Commission and the Minister for the Arts in the summer of 1978.

STANDING ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON LOCAL AUTHORITIES AND THE THEATRE

25 Buckingham Gate, London, SW1E 6LE (01-828 7931).

The Standing Advisory Committee On Local Authorities And The Theatre (SACLAT) is made up of 8 representatives appointed by the Theatres Advisory Council, 6 each by the Association of District Councils and the Association of Metropolitan Authorities and 3 by the Association of County Councils. The Arts Council of Great Britain provides an observer.

SACLAT's objectives are to bring together representatives of local authorities and the theatre to discuss matters of common concern; to give information and advice to local authorities on theatre and to hold conferences and public literature as appropriate.

SACLAT was founded in its present form in 1975.

CIVIC THEATRES

The list of Civic Theatres set out below has been compiled from replies to a general enquiry addressed to local authorities in March 1978. It purports to show the extent of the involvement of local government in the management of theatres and whether financial support is given annually thereto by rate fund contributions. It also attempts to indicate whether some form of subsidy is given (not necessarily on an annual basis) by the Arts Council of Great Britain or the Regional Arts Associations. The hope is that this information will enable particular local authorities to appreciate the extent of theatre management at the expense of the annual rate levy, and the scope for any specific lines of enquiry they may wish to pursue in this field.

It is clear from the list that not all civic theatres receive annual assistance from the Arts Council or the Regional Arts Associations. Indeed, the Arts Council of Great Britain states that it does not subsidise theatres directly managed by a civic authority, but may give support on an annual basis to independent drama companies administered on a non profit-distributing basis, and which are registered as charities.

The Civic Theatres are listed in alphabetical order of the towns in which they are situated, and with the name of the theatre followed in brackets, by the name of the responsible local authority. The letters thereafter indicate:

(a) financial support from the General Rate Fund each year;
(b) financial support from the Arts Council and/or the Regional Arts Associations;
(c) the theatre is open throughout the year;
(d) the theatre is managed by a Trust, upon which the local authority is represented.

The name and address of the manager, or responsible officer, is added.

NOTE
Local Authorities: BC—Borough Council; DC—District Council; LB—London Borough; MB—Metropolitan Borough; MCC—Metropolitan County Council; TC—Town Council.

The objects of The Arts Council of Great Britain as defined by the 1967 Royal Charter are to develop and improve the knowledge, understanding and practice of the arts; to increase the accessibility of the arts to the public throughout Great Britain; and to advise and co-operate with government departments, local authorities and other bodies on any matters concerned, whether directly or indirectly, with the foregoing objects.

REGIONAL ARTS ASSOCIATIONS

The Arts Council of Great Britain as well as local authorities, local education authorities, industry, charitable trusts and private patrons, provides funds for Regional Arts Associations which promote the development and expansion of the arts in their region.

A network of Regional Arts Associations now covers England and Wales (except Buckinghamshire), but they owe their existence less to a pre-determined national strategy than the initiative of groups of local authorities and other bodies. Regional Arts Associations are independent and autonomous bodies: they are neither regional branches of the Arts Council as is sometimes imagined nor are they purely local authority associations, but they work in partnership with both. They are concerned with all the arts—community arts, dance, drama, film, literature, music, opera, visual arts—and they combine at a regional level the work of the various national agencies such as the Arts Council of Great Britain, British Film Institute and Crafts Advisory Committee.

Generally Regional Arts Associations work through others but they are also concerned with the direct provision of arts events in those areas where no existing organization is capable of promoting them. Regional planning and co-ordination is an integral function of the RAAs and they work closely with local authorities over a wide range of activities including capital projects through the Arts Council of Great Britain's Housing the Arts Fund and the regional touring of major professional companies. The other principal services provided by the Regional Arts Associations are grant-aiding (including financial support for theatres, orchestras, arts centres, festivals and community arts), publications and publicity, advice and research; consumer subsidy; and help for artists.

Local authorities have discovered that support for and co-operation with Regional Arts Associations enables them to realize the promotion and development of their arts services to maximum effect. In addition they provide an effective means whereby the Arts Council of Great Britain can progressively devolve responsibility for many activities thereby involving the regions in the allocation of national resources or funds in their areas.

England's green and pleasant land.

Rolling meadows, peaceful villages – what happened?

Fortunately, things are changing. Buildings and environments are at last being designed so that people can actually enjoy living and working in them.

But whether your problem is helping to improve an area like the one in the picture, or creating a completely new building or housing estate, there's one timeless design feature you can't do without.

The tree.

Trees are instantly beautiful. They give pleasure, they improve the air that we breathe – and they'll go on doing so for generations.

At Exbury, we grow more heavy trees than anyone else in the country. They come to you between 3.7 and 6.0 metres high; and with a stem circumference of 12 to 24 cms. Both their height and girth renders them near enough vandal-proof. They need no special equipment for handling or planting which saves you time and money.

We can supply many different species and varieties of trees in large or small quantities, and because of our size, we can supply them at exceedingly competitive prices.

Areas like the one in the picture will never again be the pastures of England. But we could make them more pleasant. And more green.

Make a start now. Why not send us the coupon for further information.

PARKS AND OPEN SPACES—AMENITY AND LEISURE PROVISION

Review by THE INSTITUTE OF PARK AND RECREATION ADMINISTRATION

The subject heading of this section of the Municipal Year Book is Parks and Open Spaces. However, parks are nowadays conceived as outdoor recreational workshops and therefore over the years there has been an increasing involvement by the profession in providing facilities on a much wider scale, covering parks; recreation—wet and dry—indoors and out; amenity and open space; all of which may be included under the umbrella term of leisure provision.

Emphasis being placed on recreation services has encouraged local authorities to develop and improve their leisure facilities. Unfortunately the economic situation continues to make its presence felt, with the result that in many cases there has been little or no growth in respect of a service which is very much a 'growth' area. This is a pity, as it is a service which particularly contributes to the quality of life. The philosophy applied to parks, recreation, amenity and leisure provision has undergone a radical change, an on-going change also reflected in the outlook of the Institute of Park and Recreation Administration. The service is multi-discipline and offers multi-purpose facilities.

Along with the term recreation, the word environment plays a prominent part and in many ways the one is complementary to the other in the facilities promoted. The conservation of natural resources is an important aspect and the Institute of Park and Recreation Administration works closely with the land based professions and others in endeavouring to preserve our environmental heritage, yet improve the recreational aspect.

Very few new parks are being constructed but there is a continuing process of up-dating, with new design concepts incorporated, including landscaped complexes linking residential and commercial zones with existing urban parks, leading wherever possible into the countryside. Much thought—and action—is also involved in undertaking feasibility studies to ensure that the maximum use is made of existing parks and recreation facilities. A sound policy having financial restraints in mind, and one advocated by The Council for Sport and Recreation.

Reference is also made to the part being played in leisure provision by the Countryside and Forestry Commissions. The Country's recreation needs should not be only thought of at urban level, but as a total national concept.

The Institute of Park and Recreation Administration for more than fifty years has served the public through the medium of local government and by its educational endeavours, its membership, examination system and residential staff college (an associated college with the Thames Valley Regional Management Centre), has ensured a high standard of fully trained and professionally qualified officers for the service.

Through the policy of its council the Institute has involved itself in up to date thinking on amenity and leisure provisions. The Diploma of Park and Recreation Administration is one of the leading qualifications obtainable in this sphere and culminates a period of study in administration, management and modern techniques appropriate to amenity provisions, recreation and entertainment facilities.

The annual conferences of the Institute play an important part in the presentation of papers covering both technical and policy matters and allow the fullest participation of the local authority representative whilst making available a regular forum for professional members. The visits and tours of inspection which take place form a very important part of the programme. Delegates have the opportunity of not only listening to papers, but of seeing the latest developments in the provision and methods of maintenance of a modern parks, recreation, amenity and leisure service in the widest possible sense. 1979 will give the opportunity to participate in the annual conference which is to be held in North Tyneside.

The Institute's professional journal is widely read by local authority elected representatives as well as providing a technical publication for its members and related professions.

Finally, through the Institute, the profession gains also from a close link with the International Federation of Park and Recreation Administration, a world wide organization, and additionally has many links with governmental and non-governmental bodies.

INSTITUTE OF PARK AND RECREATION ADMINISTRATION

Lower Basildon, Reading, Berks., RG8 1NE (04914 3558).

The Institute was founded in 1926 with the object of providing a central organization for those persons engaged in the public parks and recreational services or similar establishments, and now enjoys a large professional membership, both at home and overseas.

In 1935 the Institute became an incorporated body, and the following are the more important aims and objects covered by the Memorandum of Association: to improve status and promote co-operation and mutual assistance, to encourage the study of technical matters and the improvement of public parks and botanic gardens and allied establishments, to promote the art and science of horticulture in design, supervision and execution of constructional work, the laying out of such constructional work and its administration and maintenance, and to provide lectures, courses of instruction and other educational facilities, technical and general. To hold examinations and grant diplomas.

In 1947 the School of Training in Park Administration was founded in the north of England, along with the first permanent headquarters of the Institute, and in 1953 the Staff College as it is now known was re-established at The Grotto, Lower Basildon, along with headquarters.

The course is of twelve months duration, and the annual intake of students is twenty per course.

The headquarters and College are situated in a small Georgian Mansion between Pangbourne and Goring-on-Thames, surrounded by pleasant grounds sweeping down to the river, in an area designated as one of outstanding beauty.

Annual conferences bring together the representatives of some 500 local authorities and give rise to close co-operation between Members and local authority Council delegates. The Institute has also organised four Congresses, at each of which some thirty countries have been represented.

The exhibitions attached to the conferences have been a regular feature since 1947, and the exhibition is now probably one of the largest of its type in Europe. Meetings are held throughout the year by the ten branches of the Institute, and form a very important part of membership life.

The Institute's professional examinations comprise an intermediate and final examination for Associate and ultimately Fellow membership.

The Diploma of Park and Recreation Administration is acknowledged to be one of the foremost qualifications for park and recreation administrators.

The Institute library consists of nearly 1,000 books covering many aspects of administration, recreation management, horticulture, and allied subjects.

The Journal of Park and Recreation—Amenity and Leisure Provision, is published monthly for the Institute, and is issued to all registered students and members, and is widely read overseas.

Membership is open to suitably qualified persons engaged in the public parks, recreation, amenity and leisure services, in the following classes by examination: Licentiate Members; Associate Members; Fellow Members.

Registered Studentship is available to those who hope to make park and recreation administration their profession.

President: David Welch, FInstPRA(Dip), NDH, DMA.

70 Brompton Rd., London, SW3 1EX (01-589 3411).

The Sports Council is an independent body, established by Royal Charter in 1972 to replace the previous advisory Sports Council, formed in 1965. There are separate Councils for Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland, though all four work closely to ensure a consistent approach to common problems.

The full Council meets five times a year and considers general sports matters, in addition to reports and recommendations from its four main committees: Facilities, Sports Development, Information (Research) and Finance.

The Council receives an annual grant from central Government which it uses to develop sport.

There are six national residential sports centres managed and financed wholly or partly by the Sports Council:

RECREATION GROUNDS AND SPORTS CENTRES

The Municipal Year Book is pleased to be able to re-introduce, after a gap of ten years, a survey of recreation grounds and leisure centres. It is appropriate, in these days of sponsorship and Government support, to record local government's part in the promotion of sport. From approaches to the editor since publication of the 1977 edition of the Year Book, it was clear that many authorities and bodies were seeking detailed information on this subject, especially in relation to the establishment of leisure centres and sports complexes.

The information is presented, in summary form, for London Boroughs, district councils, in England and Wales (B—Borough, M—Metropolitan District, W—Welsh District, WB—Welsh Borough) and for Regional Islands, and District Councils in Scotland.

THE INSTITUTE OF BATHS MANAGEMENT

Giffard Hse., 36–38 Sherrard St., Melton Mowbray, Leicester, LE13 1XJ (0664 5531/2).

The Institute was founded in 1921 as the Association of Baths Superintendents and was incorporated in 1931. It is not a Trade Union but a professional organization, supported by the fees of its members. The Institute is a Company, limited by guarantee with special permission of the Department of Trade and Industry to omit the word 'Limited', and it is also a Registered Charity. Its aims are to foster the study of the technique and design and operation of swimming pools, public laundries, sports centres and allied amenities, and also to train management personnel for these services. The Institute operates a technical Advisory Service for the benefit of local authorities, architects, engineers and consultants who are involved in the design of recreational buildings.

The Institute's Trainee Scheme, recognized by the Local Government Training Board, is for persons appointed to the NJC Trainee Grade. The training period is for a minimum of four years, and students are expected to attend an official college-based block-release course in Baths Management for a period of three years. The Institute's examinations are held annually around May, usually in a university at a centre within the area of each Branch.

General Secretary: A. W. Bennett, MBIM.

President 1978/79: A. V. Wright, FInstBM, MInstRM.

Shaping your future . . . technically

During 1977 ME changed shape and frequency but not direction. The King-size ME is published alternate Tuesdays, retaining the urgency and topicality of a news-magazine without the time-lag of a monthly. Its message, loud and clear for 103 years, is now presented more clearly and more loudly than ever before. Our editorial team, with it's combination of knowledge, technical expertise and journalistic skills is backed by a large number of distinguished outside contributors enabling ME to monitor the day-by-day developments in local government wherever they occur and report, without fear of controversy, everything of value to technical officers working for local authorities and other public undertakings.

Foreword by The Rt. Hon. MRS. SHIRLEY WILLIAMS, MP
Secretary of State for Education and Science

It has been for many years a tradition that this foreword should be written by the Secretary of State for Education and Science. It is a tradition that I have been happy to continue because it seems to me to encapsulate, in its own way, the close relationship that exists in education between central and local government.

The last few forewords cannot have made for comfortable reading because they were, as you know, written at a time when the economic restraint the Government has had to impose was at its greatest. The period of toughest restraint is now behind us, and I was glad to be able to announce in November last year that the Rate Support Grant Settlement for 1978–79 would enable local authorities to plan for an increase in overall expenditure on education and the related services over the previous year.

I said then that this was not a signal that our troubles were over. I wish the resources could have been more but it does at least provide local authorities with a basis for maintaining standards and restoring those parts of the service, such as non-teaching costs, that have been very badly hit over the last year or so. The settlement underlined the Government's main priorities for the service: to preserve staffing standards in schools; to encourage the further expansion of in–service training and greater help for the young unemployed; and to ensure continuing help for the under-fives, particularly in deprived areas. In the April budget we were able to go further and I was particularly pleased that it has been possible to restore free school milk for 7–11 year-old children from the start of the next school year.

Last year, 1977, was also the year of the regional conferences—of what has come to be known as the 'great debate' on education. It is very important that the momentum built up during that period should not be lost. As we have already made clear, the Government does not wish to see a centrally controlled school curriculum, but the outcome of the debate does suggest that we need to establish a new agreement on a framework for that curriculum. Can we afford to have a lack of agreement over the ways of achieving the fundamental objectives of education, or even disagreement over what those fundamental objectives should be? Now that the vast majority of children are being educated in comprehensive schools, the time is surely ripe for just such a reassessment of aims.

There are many things I would like to see education authorities do that will have to wait until the economy is stronger. I have a great deal of sympathy for them over the last few years. The period of tough restraint has not been easy for them—or, indeed, for any of us. But there is light at the end of the tunnel, and although our troubles are not over by any means, I think that I can promise you that the times that lie ahead will be just that little bit easier. At least, I hope so.

Shirley Williams.

formerly Chief Education Officer for Norfolk

General

Writers of annual reviews from time to time are aware of a general and continuing trend in the activities with which they are concerned. Throughout the period now under review the world of education has continued to the characterized by emerging and increasing apprehension, not always well-defined, but very general. Much had been hoped from the vastly increased expenditure on education which has characterized the past decades but in many fields results appeared to be disappointing. It was commonly alleged that children were leaving school unable to read or write and even innumerate. The teachers not unnaturally protested that the evidence for this was unreliable and that the present generation was not obviously, or demonstrably, more deficient than previous ones. They pointed to the massive broadcast programmes dealing with adult illiteracy which revealed considerable deficiencies among adults. Perhaps more disturbing was the suspicion that whatever may be lacking in our knowledge and skills our attitudes and values gave cause for greatest concern. It was beyond dispute that juvenile delinquency was increasing rapidly and violence, especially among girls, was growing at an alarming rate and was affecting children at lower ages. Indeed, violence emerged almost as a universal disease. National leaders climbed over the bodies they had slain to proclaim their peaceful objectives in all too many countries of the world. Publicity to their performance was rarely absent from the television screens. In education politicians, previously sworn to the defence of grammar schools, joined in the determination to impose comprehensive education confident that they must establish a more egalitarian and less elitist society. They rarely admitted that this might be to the detriment of the most gifted. In this climate of opinion demolition and progress were too often considered to be synonymous.

Perhaps in the technocratic society to which the world seemed desperately determined to proceed the new was inevitably confused with the good. The quality of education was inversely related to the age of school buildings. Fortunately this philosophy did not extend to the universities who took rather the reverse view. In schools in order to secure apparatus and equipment and the subject options thought to be necessary for a new generation, increasing numbers of small schools were closed in the belief that they were unable to provide what the children of the present generation needed. None the less rural communities were aware that something of great value and influence was being lost in exchange for something which seemed neither to improve conduct or the concern of the young. Further it seemed that our new technocratic society with its advanced techniques, its mass production and declining demands for labour was able to provide gainful occupation for everyone. It was obvious that juvenile unemployment was a vital disease which increased truancy and absence from school with parents' connivance. This unfortunately was one of the disruptive products of a permissive society.

An ever-increasing number of sociologists theorized on the issues rarely finding practical solutions. Educationists, and the general public alike, began to question the whole object of education and indeed the work ethic. One lecturer in further education expressed the view that 'work' was the worst four-letter word he knew, and this at a time when four letter words were at a premium especially on the media. Those who sought culture often found confusion and looked in amazement at a neatly stacked pile of bricks in a London gallery and marvelled that we could not afford kidney machines. This was then, as I have said, a time of confusion and apprehension when standards seemed to be in the melting pot. The teaching profession itself was changing its character and becoming less obviously professional and more concerned to exercise an industrial muscle in common with other trades unions. Small wonder if children felt that they should have their sit-ins in protests against the action of teachers who abandoned them at lunch time as being no longer their contractual concern. The National Union of Students sought to exercise its peculiar potentials by trying to ban contact with booksellers who would not deal in homosexual publications. One student union declined to listen to distinguished politicians who were unwilling to sign documents regarding the restriction of immigrants. In short this was a period in which freedom and reason were given less status than in any other period since education became a formal activity of the State.

This rather pessimistic appraisal, however, needs to be set against localized and specific achievements of individual schools and children. There was a brilliant series of performances by young musicians anxious to become the Young Musician of the Year. In science the British Association of Young Scientists grew in numbers and influence engaging in environmental experimentation in association with senior reserach workers. Community concern was encouraged in many schools and one was left to regret that the press all too often highlighted our failures and tended to overlook our successes. There was, however, a growing concensus that a new look was needed at almost all our educational activity. Some called for a Royal Commission on Education—others for a new Education Act. Meantime the Dept. of Education & Science prepared a discussion document entitled 'Higher Education into the 1990s' which reflected their concern for the major changes which were bound to take place.

The Schools Council

After ten years it was not unnatural that the Schools Council should have created both friends and enemies. Its record of publications was substantial and its influence on curriculum had been great. The structure whereby the teachers dominated, and some felt over-dominated, its activities led to a pressing demand for a review of its structure. This was carried through under the Chairmanship of Sir Alex Smith who rendered quite outstanding service. The original Schools Council with its teacher majority and its very strong influence from the National Union of Teachers was reformed so that its Council was replaced by a Convocation with more effective representation from higher and further education. It was increasingly recognized that the transition from school to further education or from school to work was a matter of major concern. The addition of five members representative of the community at large reflected a desire that those not professionally involved in education should be able to exert influence, a view strong emphasized in the Report of the Taylor Committee. The terms of reference for the Convocation were:

(i) to keep under review the school curriculum and the public examination system in relation to the needs of and developments within the community as a whole,
(ii) to make and publicise thereon such reports to particular interests or for general circulation as it may consider appropriate after taking account of any views expressed by the Finance and Priorities Committee and the Professional Committee,
(iii) to consider matters referred to it from any source and to consult as appropriate,
(iv) to make recommendations to or require reports from the Finance and Priorities Committee and the Professional Committee, and
(v) to approve the Annual Report and Statement of Accounts of the Schools Council.

These terms of reference represented a great broadening of responsibility. There was to be a Professional Committee representative of teachers, the Trades Union Congress, Parent Teacher Associations, the University Council for Education of Teachers, the National Foundation for Educational Research, the Chairman of the Committee of Subject Committee Chairmen, three representatives of the Secretary of State and six of Local Education Authorities and there was a third major committee, the Finance and Priorities Committee with eight representatives of Local Education Authorities, eight of the Secretary of State and twelve from the teachers. This constitution was vigorously discussed and there were those who wanted additional representation which led Sir Alex to observe that perhaps the DES and the LEA's might not permit an increase in fifty seats on Convocation but 'he was delighted to see so many people wanted to be members of this much criticized body'.

In April, 1978, Sir Alex retired from the Chairmanship before the expiry of his three years of office, but not before he had completed a magnificent reorganisation. He was succeeded by Mr. John Tomlinson, Chief Education Officer for Cheshire. Dr. Tolley of Sheffield Polytechnic succeeded Mr. Tomlinson as Chairman of the Further Education Curriculum Review and Development Unit. The Secretary of State, Mrs. Shirley Williams, expressed appreciation at the work done by Sir Alex and confidence in the future of the Schools Council. It appeared that the period of rather strained relations between the Council and the Department was at an end.

The Taylor Report

The Taylor Committee issued its Report on a New Partnership for our Schools. The Committee had been established in January, 1975 and reported on 20th September, 1977. It was concerned only with primary and secondary schools. The government of Special Schools was referred to the Warnock Committee which reported later, and most important it did not cover the voluntary schools many of which were provided by Anglican and Roman Catholic dioceses although it would seem that the Report had direct implications for voluntary schools of all types. The Report carried a lengthy appendix giving the history of the government of schools from AD 597 up to the 1944 Education Act written by George Barron. A most interesting review which came out clearly with the view that the extent to which managing and governing bodies had carried out the function envisaged for them and indeed assigned to them in the Rules and Articles of the 1944 Act had rarely been realized. While there had been some changes since 1969 the Report concludes that governors and managers and indeed to some extent parents, seemed to count for little. The Committee stressed the need for considerably increased parental and governors involvement carrying out its terms of reference which were 'to review the arrangements for the management and government of maintained primary and secondary schools in England and Wales including the composition and function of bodies of managers and governors and their relationships with Local Education Authorities, with head teachers and staffs of schools, with parents and pupils and with the local community at large and to make recommendations'.

The Report led to violent controversy. The teachers predictably objected to wnat they regarded as a potential for non-professional interference from outsiders and traditionally insisted that the teachers knew best. The implementation of the Report was obviously likely to be slow and partial but its conclusions reflected part of the anxiety of the public at large that all was not well in schools. This view was encouraged by some media programmes which gave the impression of a state of disruption and violence which if not general certainly existed in isolated schools.

Further and Higher Education

Reference has already been made to the Department of Education and Science's discussion document on Higher Education in the 1990's. The document noted that Britain's higher education system had tripled in size since 1960 and in 1978 catered for over half a million full time and sandwich course students and almost a quarter of a million part time students. These issues had been before the Oakes Working Party which had reported early in 1978. The discussion document saw the need for definite policies by the early 1980's and invited comment on five alternative models. For many a major issue was the position of the universities. At the North of England Conference in York in January 1978 Dr. Patrick Nuttgens launched a vigorous attack on the present autonomy and status of the universities regarding this as an elaborate deceit. 'Behind the fog of verbiage about autonomy and academic freedom, lurks the reality of public finance and charitable endowment.' Many who might have adopted a milder approach felt that the time was not far distant when the unity of higher education would need to have greater recognition if only to avoid expensive duplication. Polytechnics and Co. Colleges of Technology were acquiring an image of great responsibility and relevance in the economic scene.

There was continuing discussion on the role of regional bodies, of LEA's and central government. Increasing demands for freedom of action and not only on financial matters. A quite remarkable dispute found its way into the High Court. On 14th April, 1978, before Mr. Justice Slade, a case opened from a dispute over the control of admissions to a social work training course. The course was provided by the North East London Polytechnic validated by the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work. A Joint Education Committee comprising the three Boroughs Newham, Barking and Waltham Forest is responsible for the financing of the course. The controversy arose from a dispute as to whether one particular student should be allowed to enrol, and the action which might be taken by one of the LEA's if permission was not granted. The case served to show, not only private prestige arguments but an unclear specification of responsibility for finance. Similar debates had arisen over the issues of pooled expenditure and the desire of the DES to abolish or reform the pooling procedures. This finance element attracted some support but the second working party which the Oakes Committee established to consider local arrangements ended in almost total deadlock on the degree of control which local authorities should have in the administration of their institutions. The second working party's reports were considered by the Oakes Committee in September, 1977. In general members moved towards greater consensus so that in the event the document was signed on behalf of the LEA's and all the other interests represented. It was widely recognized that despite the apparent consensus may privately expressed concern about the possible implementation of the suggestions. There were many who felt the Report was unlikely to be implemented. There was, not unnaturally, a reluctance on the part, particularly of the AMA, to accept a major contribution towards the costs and a general desire that the provisions should not be too tightly drawn. Finance loomed large at a time when LEA's were under considerable restraint despite some alleviation which came in the budget of April 1978.

Local Government Reorganization

After four or five years experience of local government reorganization some apprehension of developments was manifest. The promised improvements that local government reorganization was supposed to bring were rarely realized. By 1978 there were rumblings, particularly among those on the Left, and demands for a new reorganization which might be something more like a return to what had existed previously. There was little doubt that the new set-up, partly because of the salary safeguards that had been built in and increased salaries which attached to larger authorities, was much more expensive. Many teachers and the public at large tended to feel that they were being dealt with by bodies that were more remote and less sensitive to their particular needs. It was obvious that the country could not afford either the confusion or the expense of a further reorganization. None the less it was a topic raised in many areas at the time of the local government elections. Reorganization in the provision of teacher training also caused great depression — the declining number of school children meant that unless one was to improve the teacher/pupil ratio which it was argued could not be afforded, fewer places would be needed in Colleges of Education. A great many were closed, some were amalgamated with larger institutions. For the most part the staffs of the Colleges of Education felt insecure and the year 1978 represented the nadir so far as the professionals in teacher training were concerned.

Teachers' Disputes

Once again the battle of the teachers with the authorities and the DES was continued on the issue of salaries and with the associated concepts of conditions of service. Once again teachers demanded higher rates than the Government had made it clear it could be paid and the Authorities could agree to. The arguments tended to be more sharply divisive and indeed the Employers' side was itself divided. Sir Ashley Bramall resigned as leader of the Burnham's Management Panel, mainly, however, on a difference of opinion on the extent to which officers or elected representatives should take definite action. Since Local Government Reorganization there was an increasing emphasis on the need for elected representatives to be, and to be seen to be, in control.

So far as teacher employment was concerned it was clear that it would not be long before a contract of employment would be drawn up and that the teachers would soon be working to rule. This indeed was the case on the issue of school meals when the unions for the most part required their members not to participate in any form of supervision. Those who had been familiar with the old professional concern of teachers for the welfare of their students realized how a new trade union attitude prevailed. While it remained true that most teachers have a general concern for their children many observers felt that something important and precious had been destroyed. The extra-mile appeared to be less popular perhaps inevitably in a society which was increasingly secular.

Association of Education Committees

The same sense that something of value had been destroyed occurred with the winding-up of the Association of Education Committees which for many years had been a lively independent voice for education in the field of national and local affairs. Latterly associated with the name of Lord Alexander but previously Sir Percival Sharp as Secretary, the Association had attracted to its office persons of the greatest distinction as Presidents and Vice-Presidents. The influence of the AEC not only through the Burnham Committee but in many other ways had been always towards the advancement of the education service. It was sad, therefore, that it was finally disbanded at the end of 1977. This was in a sense logical for the education committee is not the education authority. The Bains report was behind the general change and the notion of coporate management. Happily the AEC's organ, the journal, 'Education' run by Councils and Education Press was felicitously taken over by Longmans. This journal still remains among the most valuable of educational publications. Longmans appointed an educational advisory committee for the journal which involved a number of leading educational officers. During the period under review 'Education' celebrated its 75th anniversary and received tributes not only from this country but from abroad. Not least valuable are the special reports which the journal publishes and supplements as, for example, a supplement published in April, 1978, on Education Management. The new budget which the Chancellor of the Exchequer introduced in April, 1978 included some encouraging increases especially for those Education Authorities who felt constrained to cut back on expenditure in areas which were sensitive and vital. The prospect for 1979 seemed, therefore, to be better than had been the case in 1978 when there was a great deal of depression. Treasurers, however, were acutely embarrased by the increasing costs and the continuing desire of the public to keep the rates as low as possible.

Examinations

The long debate over the appropriate examinations for the 16–19 year olds continued with great pressure for single examinations rather than division between the CSE and the GCE. Reactions to the proposals of the Schools Council were predictable and the whole situation was set about by an increasing tendency to believe that examinations were in any event less reliable than had once been thought.

Personal

During the period many prominent personages died: perhaps special mention should be made of Sir Ben Bowen Thomas who was in many people's minds the father figure of education in Wales.

The Society of Education Officers, increasingly acclaimed as an important organization especially with the disbandment of the AEC, took in September, 1978 a new Secretary in the person of George Cooke, previously Chief Education Officer for Lincolnshire, and expressed its warm appreciation of the services which had been provided by Dr. Cyril Read who had retired.

COUNCIL OF LOCAL EDUCATION AUTHORITIES

CLEA was established in 1974 by the newly-formed Association of County Councils (ACC) and the Association of Metropolitan Authorities (AMA) as part of their new arrangements for education. The Council's task is to strengthen still further the status and influence of the local government sector of education and in particular to act on behalf of the ACC and AMA Education Committees in those areas where joint endeavour is appropriate, e.g. negotiations with the school and further education teachers' organizations.

Joint Secretaries: A. C. Hetherington, CBE (ACC); T. H. Caulcott (AMA).
Joint Education Officers: I. G. Cunningham (ACC); P. T. Sloman (AMA).
Principal Administrative Assistant: Ivor Widdison, Eaton Hse, 66A Eaton Sq., London, SW1W 9BH (01-235 1200).

CLEAPSE (Consortium of Local Education Authorities for the Provision of Science Equipment) Development Group.

Formed in 1963 the Consortium is open to all education authorities in England south of the line Cheshire, Greater Manchester, South Yorkshire and Humberside and now has a large membership. The services the Consortium offers are as follows:

(a) to provide an information service for teachers and county officers, evaluating commercially available science equipment so that value for money is obtained and enabling safety requirements and recommendations to be met at reasonable cost;

(b) to develop equipment for those areas of science teaching in which current provision is inadequate;

(c) to provide a discount scheme which makes minimal demands on county supplies departments and gives teachers reasonable choice.

It is very likely that from 1979 membership with entitlement to services (a) and (b) will be made available to all LEAs in England and Wales.

Director: D. A. Tawney, C.L.E.A.P.S.E. Development Group, Brunel University, Uxbridge, UB8 3PH (Uxbridge 51496).

DIPLOMAS AND COURSES IN PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION

UNIVERSITIES

Birmingham—Institute of Local Government Studies

Advanced Management Development Programme — The primary purpose of the AMDP is to promote a series of situations through which senior officers in local authorities may learn to appraise and improve their capacity to manage the affairs of their authority in a way that is responsive to the wider environment. The Programme lasts one year and has three main phases. The preparatory phase is when those responsible in the Local Authority and the Institute discuss expectations, selection and development prospects. The second phase consists of a six weeks' residential period which is intended to enhance the knowledge and skill of the participant, challenge him to re-appraise his work approach and performance and increase his capacity to solve management problems. Problem solving is considered in its political, social and personal aspects. The third phase is in the local authority where the programme member will be expected to use his work situation to develop his learning and appreciation of the management task. There will be visits from Inlogov tutors and seminars with other programme members.

Courses for Specific Local Authorities — the Institute provides post-experience courses specifically designed for their staff and taking account of the particular needs of the Authority and the issues, problems and opportunities with which it is concerned.

Short Course and Seminars — this is a means by which new ideas and approaches may be disseminated, as well as providing a forum enabling local authorities to discuss and explore problems and solutions of current concern. Recent seminars have dealt with (among other things), Area Management, Central-Local Relations, Performance Review, Corporate Planning and Output Measurement.

Special Activities — the Institute, through its teaching and research activities has built up a resource of knowledge and experience which is widely used by local government. As a result individual local authorities send individuals to the Institute for briefings; the Institute seconds members of staff to local authorities; arranges special seminars for professional bodies; acts as a convenor for special study groups.

Working Groups. The Institute convenes each year a number of ad hoc or continuing working groups of local government officers concerned with research and intelligence, educational statistics, engineering control systems, corporate planning, personnel and industrial relations, financial management, economic appraisal and performance review and is willing to convene other such groups if so requested.

The Institute will be glad to discuss with any authority ways in which assistance may be offered during the coming year. Enquries should be addressed to Professor J. D. Stewart, Director.

BA in Public Administration. The degree of BA in Public Administration was first approved in 1968 by the Council for National Academic Awards and is an Honours degree awarded following the successful completion of a four-year sandwich course.

The degree is seen as a response to the demand for modern subjects and vocational relevance in academic study to meet the need for an increasing number of graduates in public service.

The aim is to give to a graduate who is preparing for an administrative career a knowledge of political, economic and social subjects so that their relevance to contemporary problems is observed.

Distinctive features of the course are the interrelation of subjects at each stage. Comparative studies are included to acquaint the student with systems and values of other countries. Final Year—Options areas are offered in Public Administration, Social Administration and Politics.

A sandwich course is one in which training is an essential part of the course and this is arranged so that the equivalent of one year is spent on placement with a public authority.

Students may be Polytechnic-based or authority-based and all may apply to their Local Education Authority for a grant to cover the periods of full-time study and fees. The Polytechnic arranges the training in conjunction with participating authorities and where an authority sponsors a student it is usually expected he will do his training with that authority.

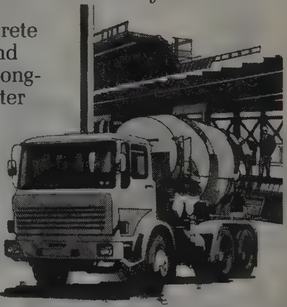
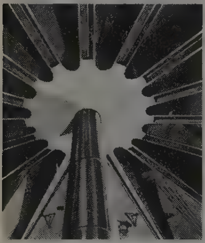
The what, where, how and why of PFA

PFA (Pulverised Fuel Ash) is one of the most successful of modern construction materials. And one of the most versatile. Some of the many ways in which PFA can save money or improve performance, or both, are outlined below. You may be pleasantly and profitably surprised to learn just how much PFA can do for you.

PFA in concrete. The advantages of PFA in concrete (including reinforced and prestressed) can be many and impressive. Greatly improved workability; increased long-term strength; less bleeding; lower temperature rise after placing; better resistance to attack by chemicals and aggressive water; a finer finish; and lower costs.

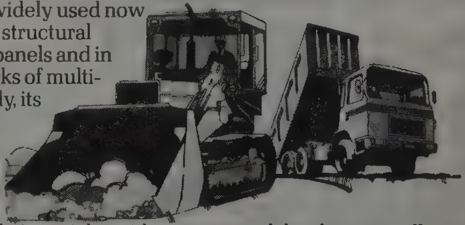
To obtain the maximum advantage from PFA, it is important to design the concrete to suit your job. This is something on which we will be very ready to help you.





PFA in lightweight aggregate. The weight of sintered PFA concrete is around two-thirds that of concrete made from natural aggregate, whilst its thermal insulation is about twice as good. These two factors together explain why lightweight aggregate made from PFA is being used more and more in advanced concrete structures.

It is widely used now in precast structural cladding panels and in frameworks of multi-storey buildings – and, undoubtedly, its combination of lightness, strength and high thermal resistance will increase its popularity.



PFA as load-bearing fill. The properties of PFA as a load-bearing fill are outstanding. It is light in weight, with a compacted dry density well below that of most conventional materials; it imposes a lower burden on sub-strata; it is easily handled and compacted; it is self-hardening and has a shear strength which increases with time. If there are landscaped areas to be planted, this can frequently be done with a minimum of further treatment.

apt hydraulic traffic & security barriers

Apt Controls Ltd offer their range of power driven and manual security and traffic barriers which are the basis of their maxim that "SECURITY BEGINS AT THE FACTORY GATE". The various models available allow a maximum span of 30ft where necessary and need no end support. This means that two barriers installed tip to tip could give full control over an unobstructed opening of 60ft. The use of Apt barriers allows you to be certain you have control and supervision of vehicle movement into and out of your factory or car park.

Apt barriers have a purpose designed heavy duty power pack incorporating a powerful 200/250VAC electric driven hydraulic pump, actuating one or two rams, to raise and lower the arm. The system is low pressure throughout. Barriers come in a standard finish—high gloss enamel in official traffic yellow colour. Stove enamelled. Installation is simple and can be easily undertaken by any works engineer and electrician. Comprehensive instructions and drawings are supplied. Only the absolute minimum of routine maintenance is required.

Various optional equipment is available including warning lights, reflectorised STOP discs, automatic opening and closing using electronic vehicle identification and detection, and many others.

BRITISH STANDARDS INSTITUTION

British Standards Hse., 2 Park St., London, W1A 2BS (T.A.: Standards, London, W1—Tel: 01-629 9000, Telex: 266933); Sales Office: Newton Hse., 101 Pentonville Rd., London, N1 9ND (01-837 8801, Telex: 23218)

The British Standards Institution derives its origin from the Engineering Standards Committee established by the Institution of Civil Engineers in April 1901, on the initiative of Sir John Wolfe Barry (then President). The Committee was enlarged to include representatives of other professional institutions, was incorporated as the British Engineering Standards Association in 1918, and was granted a Royal Charter in 1929. A Supplemental Charter, granted in 1931, extended its scope beyond engineering and changed the name to British Standards Institution.

The Institution is the recognised authority for the preparation and promulgation of National standards in the United Kingdom, and its work covers the whole range of industry.

British Standards prepared under the authority of the Road Engineering Standards Committee, the Automobile Standards Committee (for current membership see below) and other BSI Committees provide specifications for use in contracts, and other guidance on a wide range of items of interest to those concerned with roads and transport; materials, plant and equipment for road construction; lighting and traffic control; automobile components, materials, electrical equipment and signalling; safety equipment. Sectional lists of British Standards for Road Engineering and Automobiles can be obtained from BSI (Sales Office). In the British move to the metric system the Institution has played an important part in the change in industry.

The Institution owns certification marks the Kitemark and the safety mark, which can be used by manufacturers under licence to indicate compliance with a British Standard specification. Testing and approval services and special services related to the technical requirements in overseas markets are provided by the Institution's Centre at Maylands Avenue, Hemel Hempstead, Herts., HP2 4SQ.

The Institution is the United Kingdom member of the International Organization for Standardization and of the International Electrotechnical Commission.

GREATER LONDON COUNCIL

HIGHWAYS AND TRANSPORT

The GLC is the strategic transport authority for Greater London with wide powers to plan an integrated system of movement.

The GLC is responsible as highway authority for the construction, maintenance and lighting of about 870 miles of main road designated as "metropolitan" roads. The Department of Transport is the authority for about 150 miles of trunk roads and motorways and the London Boroughs and the City Corporation are responsible for the remainder of the network. The GLC itself executes most of the constructional work on improvements to main roads, but delegates to the boroughs almost all the maintenance and street lighting.

The key objectives for the GLCs highway strategy are the revitalisation of London's inner areas and the regeneration of its industry and commerce, together with more effective provision for the mobility of Londoners, including better facilities for bus movement, and the reduction of the environmental impact of traffic. To meet these objectives the Council has developed a system for evaluating and ranking highway schemes which takes into account a whole range of economic, social and environmental factors; has decided to base its construction programme on a level which would involve expenditure of £155 million in the next five years, and has identified a network of strategic routes as a general framework for longer term highway planning.

As traffic authority for all 7,800 miles of roads in Greater London, excluding those that are the responsibility of the Department of Transport, the GLC is continually introducing measures to reduce hazards to vehicles and pedestrians, and protect and where possible improve the environment. In conjunction with the Police, the Council is engaged in the progressive introduction of computer control of traffic signals. Already 800 signals are controlled in this way, and by March 1980, a further 200 should be under computer control, covering most of those in London.

Traffic management measures are given legal force by Orders made by the GLC after consultation with the Police, local authorities, representative organisations, etc., and after public notice they are implemented by the borough councils as agents. Care is taken when devising all forms of restriction that they suit local circumstances and operate only during the hours when they are locally necessary.

To reduce congestion and environmental disruption the GLC's policy is to control unnecessary car use by parking controls in the 40 square miles of the Inner London Parking Area and to some extent in the 24 strategic centres outside the area, while allocating parking space to those less able to use public transport or who have special needs. Parking in new office blocks and other buildings is strictly limited and in public parking space the introduction is encouraged of charging structures which encourage short term parking at the expense of long term (commuter) parking, thus giving priority to essential business uses and reducing pressure for on-street parking. The GLC is also engaged on a programme to provide additional car parking space at a number of London Transport and British Rail stations in outer London and beyond, with the object of encouraging commuters to leave their cars at the stations and continue by rail.

The GLC's policy for public transport is to provide an efficient, reliable and comprehensive public transport system with improved interchange facilities. Bus reliability, which is seen as one of the more important targets, will be improved by the reduction of congestion generally, by the re-casting of bus schedules and, in the longer term, as a result of the road construction programme.

For rail travellers, modernisation of track, signalling, and rolling stock will continue. The extension of London Transport's Piccadilly Line to Heathrow was opened in December 1977 and completion of stage 1 of the new Jubilee Line is expected at the end of 1978.

In consultation with the industry, the Council has formulated a policy for the more efficient movement of freight, which it is recognised has a key role to play in the revitalisation of London's industry. Movement by rail and water is being expanded, but it is accepted that most freight movement within London must continue to be by road. The Council is planning the establishment of a series of major freight complexes and the first depot for small hauliers has already been opened. At the same time, measures will be taken to ameliorate the environmental effects of heavy lorries.

NATIONAL BUS COMPANY

25 New Street Sq., London, EC4A 3AP.

The National Bus Company took over responsibility on 1st January 1969, for the state-owned bus companies in England and Wales. These companies, of which there are more than fifty, had previously been controlled by the Transport Holding Company. They own assets worth about £100 million, including some 19,000 buses and coaches—more than a quarter of the total number of public service vehicles in Great Britain. The NBC acquired on 1st January 1970, London Country Bus Services Limited, a company formed to take over control of the green country buses and Green Line coaches formerly controlled by London Transport. NBC and British Leyland Motor Corporation interests each own half of the issued ordinary shares in Bus Manufacturers (Holdings) Ltd. The latter owns the whole of the issued shares of the manufacturing companies Bristol Commercial Vehicles Ltd. and Eastern Coach Works Ltd. (formerly one hundred per cent NBC holding) and Leyland National Company Ltd. The Leyland National Company started to trade towards the end of 1971, its new factory in Cumbria producing a new single-deck bus for sale in Britain and abroad.

The Central Committee consists of a Chairman appointed by the Secretary of State, the chairmen of the Area Committees, and up to six other members appointed by the Secretary of State after consultation with such bodies as appear to him to be representative of the interests of persons likely to be concerned with matters within the competence of the committee. Copies of the Minutes, conclusions and recommmendations of each committee are sent to the Board concerned and, in the case of an Area Committee, to the Central Committee and, in the case of the Central Committee and the Area Committees for Scotland and for Wales, to the Secretaries of State.

At the same time they may make proposals for alleviating that hardship. Copies of their reports are sent to the Central Committee and to the Board concerned.

The Central Committee and the Committees for Scotland and Wales are required to make an annual report to the Secretary of State for Transport and the Secretary of State for Prices and Consumer Protection; copies of these reports are laid before Parliament.

The GLC is the strategic transport authority for London and in consultation among other interested bodies, with the Department of the Environment, British Railways Board and the London Transport Executive, is responsible for the preparation of plans for transport in Greater London. This control includes finance, the general level and structure of fares and the broad level of service, but excludes all day-to-day management and operations, for which the London Transport Executive is itself responsible.

The Council has also appointed, under the Act, a London Transport Passengers Committee, representing the interests of all who use London's buses and underground railways. The Committee have power to make recommendations to the Executive and to the Council about London Transport's services and facilities and to consider representations from or on behalf of transport users (other than in regard to charges or station or line closures).

The London Transport Executive's address is 55 Broadway, SW1H 0BD (Travel enquiries telephone: 01-222 1234; Administrative: 01-222 5600). The London Transport Passengers Committee are at 26 Old Queen St., SW1H 9HP (01-930 8019).

Rates Support Grant

The discussions on the Ninth Period of Rate Support Grant (the 1977 settlement for the 1978–79 grant tended to be dominated by alternative views about the equity of the distribution to non-metropolitan authorities on the one hand and the metropolitan areas and London on the other. There was certainly not so much emphasis on reducing expenditure as was the case in the previous year.

The complex process involved before the final determination of grant was, however, similar to that adopted in previous years. As readers may know, the process starts with the preparation of reports by a series of Expenditure Steering and sub-groups composed of local authority and central government representatives at officer level, organised on a service basis. These reports are designed to derive expenditure forecasts for local authority services for the coming year. A relatively new development is that these forecasts, as well as establishing the basis for the RLG settlement are intended to be used by the Government in reaching decisions about the formulation of its own expenditure plans as presented in the annual White Paper on Public Expenditure. Consequently, they cover a longer period than the RSG year.

In parallel with the work of the Expenditure Steering and sub groups, the Grants Working Group established a working party to study alternative methods of needs assessment for 1978–79 and a number of sub-groups to examine in more detail specific methods of needs assessment.

Concurrently, the Consultative Council on Local Government Finance met to consider and discuss reports emanating from the various officer groups, and in November 1977 the Government at a meeting of the Official Steering Group discussed with local government representatives proposals for the RSG settlement, prior to the statutory meeting which was held on 18 November.

Capital Finance and Borrowing

During 1977 the Local Authority Associations and the Treasury held protracted discussions about the desire of the Treasury to achieve an extension in the average maturity periods of local authority loans.

The background to the talks was that concern had been expressed officially over the possible implications arising from the movement towards short-term maturities which had developed over preceding years. This had arisen because the attitudes of lenders had, for a variety of reasons, produced a general unwillingness to lend funds for long periods and there had been increasing pressure for local authorities to borrow for shorter rather than longer terms. Coupled with this was the desire of authorities themselves not to borrow at high rates for long periods. As early as 1975, according to the CIPFA Return of Outstanding Debt as at 31 March 1975 over 20% of local debt matured over periods ranging from one to five years. Loans for less than 1 year (temporary borrowings) were, of course, already restricted under the General Consent of 1 April 1974 but considerable flexibility was still available to authorities because of the general practice of using Consolidated Loans Fund techniques and the arrangement under which individual loans need not be earmarked to particular puposes or borrowing powers.

It was important that the credit-worthiness of local authorities in the U.K. should be maintained. Despite the trustee status of local authority loans, and the high legal security offered, events, particularly in the international scene has shown that public confidence in the ability of public bodies to meet their debt obligations could easily be undermined, without good cause.

The discussions with the Treasury were virtually centred on ways in which the Government's policy of reversing the trend of shortening maturities could be achieved. The Treasury originally proposed the issuance of a standard regulation of maturity patterns applicable to all local authorities, but the local authority representatives believed that because the borrowing needs and access to borrowing sources of individual local authorities varied widely a regulatory approach would be arbitrary, complex and costly. For this reason they forwarded a voluntary code, which would also conform in concept more readily to the expressed desire of the Government to maintain local government and limit encroachment on its independence.

The outcome was that a voluntary code was established, agreed and recommended for adoption by the Local Authority Associations. This was issued in mid 1977. It envisages a gradual extension of debt maturity by action on the borrowing of the authorities in any one year, so that after 31 March 1981, the average period to maturity of loans raised in a financial year will not be less than seven years and not more than fifteen per cent of the loans must fall to be raised in any one of the succeeding three financial years.

The introduction and the adoption of this voluntary code represents an important step in the maintenance of local independence; and there is little doubt that more restrictive official measures will be adopted if the self-discipline which the code necessitates is found to be lacking.

The estimated maturity structure of loans as at 31 March 1977 was as follows (Great Britain).

Reserve balances, internal advances and temporary debt	7,447	24.0

Layfield

During 1977 the Government issued its response in the form of a Green Paper on Local Government Finance and the Report of the Layfield Committee. Most observers expected the Government's response to be somewhat less than enthusiastic, and were not disappointed.

On its paper, the Government expresses its belief in the continuation of the rating system but does not accept that it should be applied to agricultural land and buildings. It accepts the Layfield recommendation that the basis of valuation for domestic property should be changed from rental to capital values.

One major recommendation, or at least suggestion of the Layfield Committee—that there should be an additional source of local revenue, a local income tax—is not surprisingly, rejected by the Government.

The Green Paper does, however, make a strong case for the introduction of a unitary grant system, which in its simplest form would bridge the gap between the total amount a local authority needs to spend to provide a standard level of service and the product of a local rate at a specified level. This may be superficially an attractively simple notion, but overlooks the sheer practical difficulties of defining and costing "standard level of service".

The Government asked for reactions to the Green Paper by September 1977 and, of course, the many representative and professional bodies in local government were again embarked on the treadmill of supplying their views on local government finance. Since then, however, there has been virtual silence from official quarters. There is clearly too little time in the present finely balanced political situation to spare for major, or even minor, legislative reform of local government finance.

The statutory meeting was chaired by the Secretary of State for the Environment, Mr. Peter Shore and attended by seventy people representative of the central government, at ministerial and official level and the local authority Associations together with financial advisers.

The settlement, as last year, included a provision for cash limit and the needs assessment formula used was the regression based formula with "damping" so that the 1978/79 needs assessment was given equal weight with those for previous years in the derivation of the 1978/79 distribution formula. A new feature was the "safety net" payment to certain authorities to limit to a predetermined ceiling the losses of needs element caused by certain changes in the methodology. The ceiling adopted for the purpose of the safety net is a loss equivalent to a 2p rate.

At the statutory meeting it was decided that the rate of grant for 1978/79 should be 61%, (as in the previous year), based on a relevant expenditure at November 1977 prices of to 12,531 m. which is a growth of 0.2% on the 1977/78 estimated out-turn. The domestic element remained unchanged at 18½p in the £ for England and 36p in the £ for Wales. The "cash limit", which is imposed on the extra cost of services in 1978/79 which may arise after the settlement is fixed at £525 m. in grant terms (ie. equivalent to £860 m. in terms of relevant expenditure of 6.9% of relevant expenditure at November 1977 prices).

		£m. (at November 1977 prices)
(1)	Estimated relevant expenditure (Appendix A)	12,531
(2)	Aggregate Exchequer Grant at 61 per cent	7,644
(3)	Total of Specific Revenue and Supplementary Grants (Appendix B)	1,123
(4)	Rate Support Grant (Item (2) minus Item (3))	6,521
(5)	Needs	3,946
(6)	Resources	1,901
(7)	Domestic	674

The main emphasis for future negotiations seems likely to be concentrated on the method of needs assessment, and the improvement of the data which is used to calculate needs assessments, which give rise to some concern among the negotiators.

The prospect of some easing of the pressures on local government expenditure, evident in the Public Expenditure White Paper, and the slowing down of inflation should help to overcome some of the difficulties in securing an equitable distribution of RSG. It is, after all, easier to accommodate change with a kitty which is growing, even if only moderately, than with one which is static or shrinking.

THE CHARTERED INSTITUTE OF PUBLIC FINANCE AND ACCOUNTANCY

Brief History

Founded 1885 as The Corporate Treasurers and Accountants Institute, subsequently changed to the Institute of Municpal Treasurers and Accountants and more recently, by Supplemental Royal Charter, to the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy.

Functions

The Institute's Royal Charter describes its principal objectives as:

(a) to advance the science of public finance and of accountancy and cognate subjects as applied to all or any of the duties imposed upon and functions undertaken by public service bodies;

(b) to promote public education therein;

(c) to promote and to publish the results of studies and research work therein and in related subjects.

The Institute is not directly concerned with the advancement of the personal interests of its members.

The CIPFA's activities and interests include the following:

(1) Professional Accountancy

The CIPFA is one of the six major professional accountancy bodies in the United Kingdom. Its members specialize in finance and accountancy for public service bodies, and membership as professional accountants is by examination. The Institute is making extensive changes in its education and training arrangements. It will promote the highest standard of professional competence of its members.

Professional accountant members have the designation 'Institute of Public Finance Accountant' and are entitled to use the letters IPFA.

(2) Public Service

The IMTA had its origins in local government, but its activities have long extended beyond local government, and many of its members serve in other fields.

The CIPFA's interests and activities extend across the public sector, in public finance and accountancy in the health service, new towns, public transport, the water industry, the nationalized industries, and other public organizations as well as central and local government.

(3) Services and Facilities

The CIPFA in parallel with its activities as a professional accountancy body, maintains a wide range of services for public finance and accountancy:

THE RATING AND VALUATION ASSOCIATION

115 Ebury St., Belgravia, London, SW1W 9QT.

The Association was founded in 1882 with a more limited sphere of interest than that of today. Apart from the importance of the duties connected with rating and valuation in the public service there is now a very much wider interest in local taxation by the public and their professional advisers than applied in those days. Developments in rating and valuation law and practice during the past quarter of a century have been considerable and the increasing complexities have necessarily made this branch of the law a somewhat specialist one. Throughout its existence, the Association has never neglected the many important branches of study allied to the purposes emphasised in its name and the Association's qualification in three alternative grades offers scope to all whose professional work is concerned with rating and valuation.

The principal objects of the association are to improve the technical knowledge and professional status of persons engaged in rating valuation and allied spheres of business or employment, to promote the study of all branches of the law appropriate to these professional activities, to advise members, public departments, local authorities and associations on any matter coming within the scope of such activities and the promotion or consideration of legislation in connection with the objects of the Association. Further objects cover educational, technical, benevolent and other activities.

Secretary: Brian L. Hill, RD, BA, BSc(Est Man), FRVA.

It is anticipated that Mr. R. Egarr, IPFA, FRVA, MBIM, will be elected President of the Association in November 1978.

CONSULTATIVE COUNCIL ON LOCAL GOVERNMENT FINANCE

The Council met first in May 1975. It has no formal terms of reference, but provides a forum for regular consultation between central and local government on major financial issues. Its business includes the rate support grant negotiations; and through the Council local government is now associated with the annual Public Expenditure Survey. The Council is intended to complement other channels of communication between local government and individual Government Departments.

The Council is chaired by the Secretary of State for the Environment and meetings are attended by Ministers from Government Departments responsible for local authority services, supported by officials, and by elected members of the local authority associations who are supported by their officials. Meetings are held about six times a year.

Wales is represented on the Council because at present the rate support grant negotiations are conducted on an England and Wales basis; for other matters Wales has its own Council. In Scotland regular meetings take place between the Secretary of State for Scotland and the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities; the business of these meetings includes the annual rate support grant consultations. Northern Ireland has established a separate Consultative Committee to provide for regular consultation between central and local government on financial and other matters.

THE LOCAL AUTHORITIES' MUTUAL INVESTMENT TRUST

Winchester Hse., 77 London Wall, London, EC2N 1DB (01-588 1815).

Chairman: F. D. Pickering, CBE.

Director: Viscount Churchill.

Secretary: D. F. Hart.

Advisory Panel: E. M. Dawson; W. T. J. Griffin, FCA; C. J. Kirman; Sir Dennis Pilcher, CBE, FRICS.

The Local Authorities' Mutual Investment Trust is a company incorporated under the Companies Act, 1948, limited by guarantee and not having a share capital. It was brought into being pursuant to Section 11 of the Trustee Investments Act, 1961, by the Associations of local authorities in England and Wales and in Scotland for the purpose of providing local authorities with facilities for collective investment and with an investment advisory service.

The Trust is wholly controlled by persons appointed by the Associations and its main functions are (without profit to itself or remuneration for its members) to manage three common Investment Funds which it has established and to provide an investment advisory service for individual authorities. The affairs of the Trust are managed by a Council of nineteen members assisted by four Investment Advisers well-known for their investment experience. The day-to day management of the Investment Funds is the responsibility of a Director appointed by the Council.

The three Investment Funds are the Wider-Range Fund, which is primarily invested in UK ordinary shares and in freehold and long leasehold property, and had a capital of approximately £45 million in February 1978; the Narrower-Range Fund, invested in fixed interest stocks, having a capital at that date of approximately £1 million; and the Property Fund with a capital of approximately £64 million which is invested in real property and is open to authorities with powers to invest in properties or property unit trusts. The majority of the funds contributed for investment represent superannuation monies: these are of a long-term nature and the investment policy of the Trust is framed accordingly. The main objective of the Wider-Range Fund and the Property Fund is to protect and if possible to increase the real value of contributors' capital and of the income derived from it. Regard is had to the total return, capital and income combined. The main object of the Narrower-Range Fund is to achieve a high sustainable level of income bearing in mind the need for security of contributors' capital and the maintenance of its value over a period at least in money terms. Broadly speaking participating authorities would be justified in looking to the Narrower-Range Fund for a high level of current income and to the Wider-Range Fund and the Property Fund for long-term growth. There are 164 authorities contributing directly to the Funds.

The Wider-Range Investment Fund possesses extended investment powers conferred by statute enabling it to invest, inter alia, in overseas securities and real property. In February 1978 the Fund had some £11 million invested in real property and some £3 million invested in the United States of America and other overseas countries Investment in the Wider Range Fund does not count as an investment in real property for the purpose of the quantitative limitation of administering authorities' powers in this respect.

The Funds are valued at the end of each month. The value of a Unit is then determined, and it is at that value (plus a surcharge to cover the cost of investment) that new contributions are accepted into the Funds, and units allotted to local authorities. Income is distributed half yearly to unit holders, in March and in September The Funds are not liable to Capital Gains Tax and contributing authorities are enabled to recover United Kingdom income tax deducted from or credited against income.

For the latest information about the Funds, application should be made to the Secretary.

'. . . is duly elected Councillor for this ward'

When the Councillor's Handbook was first published in 1960 it was intended for the councillor new to local government. Even so, a very large number found their way into the hands of more experienced councillors.

With the coming into being of the new local government on 1 April 1974 all councillors were to some extent 'new'. In England and Wales alone there were nearly 22,000 councillors, all facing a new range of problems. The scale and complexity of local government had changed overnight, presenting elected representatives with a major challenge.

With this in mind, the Municipal Journal commissioned a new version of the Councillor's Handbook, defining the role and tasks of councillors in terms of the new local government situation. This completely re-written version is the work of Professor J. D. Stewart, Director of the Institute of Local Government Studies, University of Birmingham, and John K. Boynton, Chief Executive of Cheshire County Council and a Past President of the Society of Local Authority Chief Executives.

This second edition incorporates much new material and takes account of changes which have occurred since 1974.

The cost of the Councillor's Handbook is £1.00 per copy including postage, with Bulk orders (40 or more) receiving 15 per cent discount.

LOANS BUREAU, CIPFA SERVICES LTD.

Bureau Manager: J. R. Winch IPFA, 232 Vauxhall Bridge Rd., London, SW1V 1AU (01-834 0466).

The Loans Bureau started from what may now seem very small beginnings on a mutual aid basis by treasurers voluntarily putting together deals between neighbouring local authorities, the idea being that with advantage to both, authorities in temporary cash surplus could lend to other authorities who would otherwise be overdrawn at the bank. The movement caught on during the 1950's and 60's so that by 1970 there was a large number of such bureaux spread throughout the country. At that stage the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy undertook responsibility for the organizations and subsequent rationalization resulted in concentration into a single bureau with a properly equipped dealing room and 14 dealers at 232, Vauxhall Bridge Rd. SW1. It now operates within the framework of a private limited company, Cipfa Services Ltd., whose directors are nominated by the Institute Council.

The Bureau offers a membership to all local and public authorities in the United Kingdom and the vast majority have taken up membership for a small annual fee. As a corollary commission charges levied on borrowing authorities are pitched at a level significantly lower than those made by commercial broking houses.

Loans are arranged for amounts from £25,000 to £10,000 millions or more and for periods between 1 day to 10 years and over, with any variation between to suit lenders and borrowers. At least one leg of every transaction must be with a local authority or public corporation. Naturally local and public authorities as providers of funds are rarely able to lend for more than strictly limited periods, and to supplement these short term funds and to obtain money for the medium and long term the Loans Bureau is increasingly turning to commercial and banking sources and now has a very wide range of clients able to supply all types of loan requirement.

Growth has been very rapid in the few years since this centralized local and public authority broking organization was set up. Turnover now amounts to many billions of pounds a year and is increasing steadily despite the fact that growth in public expenditure has been vigorously curtailed in recent years. The next stage of development in this business is likely to involve membership of an Association of Sterling Brokers which is being established under the aegis of the Bank of England. This will assist the orderly development of the market and the setting up and implementation of codes of conduct. The Loans Bureau looks forward to becoming a full member of this body.

In addition to its day to day market operations the Loans Bureau also plays a considerable part in the weekly issue of Negotiable Bonds (often still referred to as 'Yearlings' although they are issued for longer periods), the arranging of finance for leasing equipment and the arrangement of syndicated bank loans for multi million amounts. It also acts as a focal point for advising on stock issues and indeed any matter associated with the subject of capital finance.

The Bureau provides a service to the general public and to local government generally in publicizing the opportunities for small investment in local 'over the counter' bonds. In the latter field it is one of the original Information Providers in the Post Office View Data System—which gives computer-stored information through the medium of specially adapted television receivers.

Last but not least it provides a service for staffs of local and public authorities who are concerned with Capital Finance—by issuing bulletins and news letters, arranging courses and seminars and generally being available to offer advice and guidance when required.

LANDS TRIBUNAL

5 Chancery La., London, WC2 (01-831 6611).

President: Sir Douglas Frank, QC.

Registrar: O. L. Mott.

Administration Section: C. A. Carter.

All communications should be addressed to the Registrar.

The Lands Tribunal, which is an independent judicial body, was constituted by the Lands Tribunal Act 1949 for the purpose of determining a wide range of questions relating to valuation of land, compensation for the compulsory acquisition of land, rating appeals from local valuation courts and the discharge or modification of restrictive covenants. The Act also empowers the Tribunal to accept the function of arbitration under references by consent.

Since 1949 the jurisdiction has been extended by numerous public and private Acts of Parliament and by Orders in Council made under the Lands Tribunal Act 1949. The extended powers include the determination of disputes as to the valuation of land for taxation, the assessment of betterment levy imposed in respect of land, and the price or rent payable by a leaseholder exercising statutory rights to enfranchise or extend a lease.

The Tribunal consists of a legally qualified President and other members appointed by the Lord Chancellor, who may be either lawyers or persons with experience in the valuation of land. The Tribunal hears cases not only in London but at convenient centres throughout England and Wales. Any person dissatisfied with the decision of the Tribunal on a point of law may require it to state a case for the decision of the Court of Appeal.

The Tribunal has power to award costs in any proceedings before it.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT AUDIT

Local authorities spend large sums of money, derived mainly from rates and taxes and external audit has an important part to play in the maintenance of public confidence in these bodies.

England and Wales

Part VIII of the Local Government Act 1972 contains the external audit provisions in relation to local authorities in England and Wales. The Act provides for a choice between the district auditor and an "approved" auditor and the 456 local authorities (including Greater London) have exercised their choice as follows:

424 for district audit
11 shared.

An approved auditor must be a member of one of the principal accountancy bodies and his appointment must be approved by the Secretary of State for the Environment.

District auditors are appointed by the Secretary of State for the Environment but they are independent officers and are not subject to his direction or control. England and Wales are divided for audit purposes into a number of audit districts each with a district auditor; a list of their names, addresses and telephone numbers appears below.

The National Water Council, the nine Regional Water Authorities and the Welsh National Water Development Authority have the same choice of audit as the local authorities. The National Water Council and eight Regional Authorities have chosen approved auditors, while the Thames Water Authority and the Welsh National Water Development Authority are subject to District Audit.

(For further information on District Auditors a reference should be made to Section 31 for an entry under the Department of the Environment.)

Scotland

The Commission for Local Authority Accounts in Scotland is a statutory body formed under the Local Government (Scotland) Act, 1973, and is independent of both central and local government. The members of the Commission are appointed by the Secretary of State for Scotland. Meetings of the Commission take place at approximately monthly intervals.

The major part of the Commission's work is to secure the audit of the accounts of the Local Authorities in Scotland and of a number of associated public boards. This work is carried out through the Controller of Audit, who is appointed by the Commission, and who is required under the Act to prepare an annual report to record the development and matters arising out of the audit of Scottish Local Authorities.

Agent firms have been appointed to audit approximately 8% by value of local authority accounts, leaving the remainder to be audited by staff directly employed by the Commission. All the firms of professional accountants, who accepted appointments from the Commission, were provided with an initial note of general guidance and information by the Controllers of Audit.

A list of Authorities and Auditors appears after the index on local authorities and audit districts in England and Wales.

Northern Ireland

The audit of the accounts of the 26 District Councils in Northern Ireland is undertaken by the Local Government Audit Branch of the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland.

There are six Local Government Auditors in Northern Ireland headed by the Chief Local Government Auditor, and they are also responsible for the audit of the accounts of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, the Fire Authority for Northern Ireland and the Local Government Officers' Superannuation Committee.

Review by T. N. WATKINS, OBE, FIFireE, AMBIM
Chief Fire Officer, Derbyshire County Council

The latter part of 1977 was dominated by the Firemen's strike when the Fire Brigades Union, for the first time in its history, withdrew its labour in support of a pay claim. The strike commenced with the first shift on Monday, 14th November, 1977 with almost 100% response and ended at 0900 hours on Monday, 16th January, 1978.

During this period fire cover throughout Britain was maintained by Military personnel using ex Auxiliary Fire Service appliances withdrawn from Home Office Supply and Transport Stores. Supporting these personnel were those members of the Fire Brigades Union who did not strike and members of the Chief and Assistant Chief Fire Officers Association and National Association of Fire Officers.

Whilst the enthusiasm and dedication of the troops was unquestionable, they had neither the training, experience or equipment to deal with incidents with the same effectiveness as the professional fire fighters and this is reflected in the increased fire loss.

Fire cover throughout the country was substantially reduced, attendance times increased and during the period November, December 1977 and January 1978, the estimated fire loss of £117·5 m was well over double that of the corresponding months of the previous year.

Up until the time of the Firemen's strike, 1977 was showing a slight reduction in fire loss terms and now that normal working has been resumed it is hoped that this trend will continue.

The drought of 1976 and the Firemen's strike have highlighted the usefulness of a strategic force of fire fighting appliances and it is hoped that some discussions may commence on the method to accomplish this aim.

Fire Prevention

The full effects of the Fire Precautions Act 1971 (as amended and modified by Section 78 of the Health & Safety at Work Act 1974 and the appropriate Statutory Instruments relevant to factories, offices, shops etc.) is now affecting Fire Authorities in the additional workload involved. The time factor for inspections and particularly the preparation of Fire Certificates is one of the factors relative to work output against staff availability.

THE INSTITUTION OF FIRE ENGINEERS

148 New Walk, Leicester, LE1 7QB (0533 59171).

The Institution of Fire Engineers was founded in 1918 and incorporated in 1924, chief among its objects being:

(a) To promote, encourage and improve the science and practice of Fire Extinction, Fire Prevention and Fire Engineering and all operations and expedients connected therewith, and to give an impulse to ideals likely to be useful in connection or in relation to such science and practice to the members of the Institution and to the community at large.

(b) to enable members to meet and to correspond and to facilitate the interchange of ideas respecting improvements in the various branches of the said science and the publication and communication of information on such subjects.

The Journal, published quarterly, containing papers on subjects connected with Fire Engineering, is published and sent without charge to all members and students.

The current membership is approximately 8,500.

FOOD

In recent years reviews on environmental health have stressed the implications of EEC policies on United Kingdom food legislation. The EEC's food harmonization programme could result in the United Kingdom amending much of its existing food law and introducing a number of new controls and methods of control to meet European policies. There are wide implications regarding enforcement procedures for local authorities and their environmental health officers.

Despite considerable opposition the Poultry Meat (Hygiene) Regulations came into operation on 1st January, 1977. They allowed certain exemptions and derogations but those district councils with poultry slaughtering and packing premises in their areas had to plan for the phasing in of the Regulations. This involved arrangements for the recruitment and training of the necessary staff for the inspection procedures.

Meat Hygiene Working Group

Of particular importance in 1977 were the discussions within the Meat Hygiene Working Group. The Group was set up by the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food following the Parliamentary debate on the poultry issue at the end of 1976; its main purpose being to examine and make recommendations on the future relationships between environmental health officers, veterinary surgeons and authorised meat inspectors in matters of meat inspection and hygiene.

There were differences in the basic attitudes and policies of the three disciplines represented on the Group but in July, 1977 the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food circulated for comment a series of recommendations which might provide a basis for a compromise solution. These related to red meat slaughterhouses used solely for the home trade; slaughterhouses approved for export trade with the EEC, and future policies regarding meat based products. The first positive development came in 1978 with the proposals for "export slaughterhouse regulations" designed to meet EEC requirements by placing such premises under veterinary control for all production purposes.

Meat-based products

The outcome of the EEC Committee of the Enquiry into the qualifications of non-veterinary personnel for the control and supervision of meat product plants was, in the early months of 1978, still awaited. The Committee visited the United Kingdom in 1977, received representatives from the organizations involved and included a number of visits in its programme. The Government re-iterated its policy to press for the acceptance of environmental health officers as supervising and certifying officers for the processing of meat products for intra-community trade. The Government had also confirmed it had no intention of agreeing to any extension of veterinary involvement, outside poultry or red meat slaughterhouses, in the duties that were the responsibility of environmental health officers.

Meat from third countries

Discussions have continued on the implementation of EEC Directive 72/462 relating to the importation of animals and fresh meat from third countries.

Slaughterhouse hygiene

The Slaughterhouses (Hygiene) Regulations 1977 (S1 1977: 1805) came into operation on 11th May, 1978 but provided for a number of derogations to give time for alterations or purchasing new equipment. The Regulations will bring United Kingdom slaughterhouses much closer to the EEC standards for intra-community Trade.

Housing

During 1977 the Department of the Environment announced fundamental changes in capital expenditure arrangements for all aspects of local authority housing responsibilities. Each local authority has been given a financial allocation for each of four categories or "blocks" of housing expenditure. In order to help to formulate the council's housing strategy the Department required each local authority to supply detailed statistics on the state of housing in the district.

In June, 1977 the Government published its Green Paper "Housing Policy" (Cmnd 6851) which followed a comprehensive review of housing policies in England and Wales which began early in 1975. It covered many aspects of housing and declared that all families should be able to obtain a decent home at a price within their means. The Green Paper claimed much progress towards this aim but the document contained a sufficient number of pointers to indicate that we still have a very long way to go.

One important matter arising from the Green Paper was the significant increase in the number of houses requiring major repairs. Clearly much more progress has to be made in raising housing standards and a policy urgently pursued in seeing that the present housing stock is maintained to a high standard of repair.

In 1977 the DOE published its Report of the Mobile Homes Review and Circular 12/78 reminded local authorities that mobile homes have a positive, if limited, contribution to make to the provision of housing. It was said that they provide an extra choice in housing which it is important ro preserve and whose merits have not always been recognised by local authorities. This, however, does raise the question of standards.

OCCUPATIONAL HEALTH

The Health and Safety at Work, etc., Act 1974 was partially brought into operation on 1st January, 1975 but it was not until June 1977 that Regulations became operative allocating the responsibility for specific types of premises between the Health and Safety Executive and the other enforcement arm, the local authorities.

The Health and Safety (Enforcing Authority) Regulations 1977 gave local authorities power to enforce the Act in most of the premises in which they had been enforcing the Offices, Shops and Railway Premises Act, 1963. The principle for allocation is that of activity rather than premises.

A Training Sub Committee of a Liaison Committee of the Health and Safety Executive and local authorities developed "topping-up" courses for local authority officers to help them new demands under the legislation.

POLLUTION CONTROL

Pollution Paper No. 9 "Pollution Control in Great Britain: How it Works" published by the Central Unit on Environmental Pollution of the DOE reviewed legislative and administrative procedures in the UK for environmental pollution control.

The Control of Pollution Act, 1974 extended a wide range of new powers to local authorities increasing their abilities to deal with air pollution and noise. The national economy imposed restraints on both industry and local authorities in the mid-1970s in their efforts to control pollution. The Fifth Report of the Royal Commission on Environmental Pollution recognized the important role of local authorities in pollution control and the proposals that there should be ever increasing co operation between the enforcing bodies and more frankness with the public were welcomed.

STAFFING

In April, 1978 the Report of the Environmental Health Staffing Study Group was published. The study was initiated in 1976 by the local authority associations, the NJC (employers side) and the Local Government Training Board with assistance from officer advisers.

The Report states its aim is to help local authorities make their own decisions about organisation, staffing and training. it poses a number of questions for consideration based on the need to assess the types of staff needed, how many are required and how best they can be trained to match job performance requirements.

Local authorities and their officers will be studying the Report to make sure that present arrangements are relevant, offer the right value for money and provide the service required in each district.

ENVIRONMENTAL HEALTH OFFICERS ASSOCIATION

19 Grosvenor Pl., London, SW1X 7HU (01-235 5158).

The Association was founded in 1883 and in 1891 was registered as an incorporated company with the title of Sanitary Inspectors Association. The name was changed in 1957 to the Association of Public Health Inspectors and in 1975 to Environmental Health Officers Association following the changes brought about by the local government reorganization of 1974. The motto of the Association is Amicus humani generis (friend of the human race).

The Association is a professional and educational body, dedicated to the promotion of environmental health. It is particularly concerned in encouraging the highest possible standards both in the training and the work of environmental health officers. The Association helps members with advice and the latest technical information.

There are about 6,000 members, most of whom work for local authorities in England, Wales and Northern Ireland. There are some members overseas and a growing number of environmental health officers are employed by commercial and industrial firms.

The Association appoints 8 representatives to serve on the Environmental Health Officers Education Board, the body which regulates the training of environmental health officers. The qualification is the Diploma in Environmental Health issued by the Board or a Degree which carries exemption from the Board's own examination. The Association is responsible for the administration of this Board as well as its associate body, the Registration Board.

The Society of Environmental Health Officers is a limited Company whose organization and administration is closely tied in with that of the Association both at local and national level. It was established in 1977 and conducts all matters relating to the service conditions of environmental health officers. The Society is represented on the Joint Consultative Committee of NALGO.

362 Euston Rd., London, NW1

The Association of Community Health Councils for England and Wales officially came into being in July 1977. Broadly defined, the objects of the Association are: to provide a forum of discussion and exchange of views on NHS matters of common concern; to express and publicise these views; to provide information and advice for CHCs, and to advance their interests.

It is a voluntary association, giving Community Health Councils the option of taking membership or declining it. Finance comes from two sources. "CHC News" and the associated information service, which are available to all CHCs whether members of the Association or not, are paid for by the DHSS. The forum, exchange and representational functions rely on the subscription of member CHCs. For 1978-79 the annual subscription is £150.

The Annual General Meeting of the Association is the governing body of the Association. The business of the Association is conducted between Annual General Meetings by the Standing Committee, which has twenty-nine members and eight secretary-observers.

CORRELATION INDEXES

ENGLAND

The following correlation index of Local Government Districts/Area Health Authorities has been compiled with the assistance of the Department of Health and Social Security.

Medical Officer for Environmental Health is the short title for the doctor who is the proper officer to the Local Authority with responsibility for the control of notifiable disease and food poisoning, and medical adviser on environmental health generally. The following list of these officers in England has been compiled from information kindly supplied by the DHSS. The list is Crown Copyright and is reproduced with permission of the Controller of Her Majesty's Stationery Office.

WALES

In Wales the areas of the eight Health Authorities coincide with the boundaries of the eight Administrative County Councils in the Principality (see Section 32), and the local government districts are the same in both the Health Authorities and the County Councils. The District Councils are listed collectively also in Section 32 and the individual entries for the District Councils in Section 34 contain both the name of the County Council and the Health Authority.

SCOTLAND

A similar correlation index has been prepared for Scotland linking the Scottish Local Government Districts with the Scottish Health Board Districts. SEAPORT AND AIRPORT HEALTH AUTHORITIES IN ENGLAND AND WALES

Seaports

Statutory authority to constitute Port Health Authorities (styled before 1936 "Port Sanitary Authorities" by Order of the Local Government Board, and to invest them with appropriate powers, was first contained in Sections 287 to 290 of the Public Health Act 1875, with Section 291 of the Act itself constituting the Authority for London. These Statutory powers are now embodied in Sections 2 to 5 and 9 and 10 of the Public Health Act 1936, Sections 254 and 262 of the Local Government Act 1972 also apply and Sections 5 and 6 of the Public Health (London) Act 1936, and are administered by the Secretary of State for Social Services. The primary purpose in setting up Port Health Authorities was to prevent the import and export—of infectious disease.

Port Health Authorities (outside London) are constituted from "riparian authorities" i.e., those Local Authorities whose districts in any part abut on the "Customs ports" which have been established by Customs and Excise for revenue purposes and comprise the whole coastline and shores of navigable rivers. A Port Health Authority may be constituted from one riparian authority and be in effect a committee of the Authority (but having its own constitution and powers) for example, as at Southampton or from two or more riparian authorities to form a joint board, the authorities being represented on the board and contributing towards its expenditure— for example, as at the River Tyne. The Corporation of London are constituted the Port Health Authority for the London area.

The area of jurisdiction of a Port Health Authority is specified in the constituting Order and the land and seaward boundaries are usually coterminous with those of the Customs port. In practically all cases the area comprises only water, the inclusion of land being very exceptional, and it does not overlap the district of any riparian authority from which the Port Health Authority are constituted. The area of the London Port Health Authority extends from Teddington Lock but, exceptionally it includes land (e.g., the land within the dock gates). Under the City of London (Various Powers) Act 1965, the Seaward Boundaries for the London Port Health Authority are. imaginary straight lines drawn from latitude 51°37 00″ north, longitude 00°57 19″ east (Foulness Point in the county of Essex) to latitude 51°46 05″ north longitude 01°20 32″ east (Gunfleet Old Lighthouse) and thence to latitude 51°26 36″ north longitude 01°25 30″ east and thence to latitude 51°24 55″ north longitude 00°54 21″ east (Warden Point in the county of Kent).

A Port Health Authority may have assigned to them in the constituting order any of the powers, etc., of a Local Authority under the Public Health Acts, and they may exercise many of the powers in respect of ships within the area of jurisdiction (see Section 267 of the Public Health Act 1936). In practice, the powers, etc., assigned are restricted to those so exercisable, i.e. in the main, those in Parts III, V, VI and XII of the Act of 1936. The chief duties of a Port Health Authority arise, not only from these statutory provisions, but from the Public Health (Ships) Regulations 1970 as amended 1974 and 1978, made by the Secretary of State for Social Services under Section 143 of the Public Health Act 1936 which inter alia contain provisions for implementing the Government's obligations under the International Health Regulations of the World Health Organization. A Port Health Authority may also have duties under other enactments – for example, in connection with imported food, destruction of rodents on coastwise ships, etc.

Port health inspectors are responsible, as authorized officers under the Imported Food Regulations 1968 as amended, for the examination of foods imported for human consumption and for the detention of any foods which appear to them to be unsound, unwholesome or unfit for human consumption. They also carry out various other health and hygiene controls, e.g., under the Food Hygiene (Docks, Carriers, etc.) Regulations 1960 and under general public health legislation.

A riparian authority whose district is not included in a port health district has the same functions under the Public Health (Ships) Regulations as a Port Health Authority.

From 1 April 1974 expenditure on port health services by local authorities (as defined in section 10 of the Local Government Act 1974) is relevant expenditure for Rate Support Grant purposes. Authorities which are not so defined as local authorities may precept neighbouring local authorities in order to meet their costs in carrying out port health functions.

Detailed information about Customs ports, port health districts and riparian districts is contained in the "Reports and Papers on the Port and Riparian Sanitary Survey of England and Wales, 1893–94", published by the Local Government Board (Command No. 7812–1895), and much of it, particularly that relating to the limits of ports, still holds good.

Airports

Section 15 of the Customs and Excise Act 1952 (which replaces a similar provision which appeared previously in Air Navigation Orders) in effect requires aircraft coming to the United Kingdom first to alight at a Customs airport. At such an airport there is the same need for health control as at a seaport, but the speed of air travel necessitates even greater vigilance. All the principal civilian airports in this country have been designated Customs airports, and, broadly, they may be divided into three categories: (a) "National airports"–i.e., airports vested in or under the control of the Department of Trade or the British Airports Authority (set up by the Airports Authority Act 1965); (b) municipal airports; and (c) privately owned airports.

NOTE Airports at which Customs facilities are provided, or are available, for specified services at certain periods only, are not treated as Customs airports.

The powers, etc., for applying health control at airports are contained in regulations made by the Secretary of State for Social Services. Regulations on this subject were first made in 1938, under Section 143 of the Public Health Act 1936 (like the Public Health (Ships) Regulations). Subsequently, additional powers were given by the Civil Aviation Act 1946 (now contained in the Civil Aviation Act 1971) to apply the Regulations to "National airports" (which are Crown property) and the current regulations – the Public Health (Aircraft) Regulations 1970 as amended 1974 and 1978 – were made under the Acts of 1936 and 1971.

The Authorities responsible for executing and enforcing the Regulations at airports (styled "responsible authorities") vary with the category of the airport.

(a) At "National airports", the Secretary of State for Social Services is primarily the "responsible authority" but he has power to delegate his functions to local authorities (including County Councils) or to the British Airports Authority at airports under its control. In every case the Secretary of State has delegated his functions to a local authority which then becomes the "responsible authority". The "responsible authority" at a "National airport" need not be the local authority for the district in which the airport is situated and, in practice, the delegation varies with circumstances of the particular airport.

(b) At a municipal airport, the maintaining local authority are usually the "responsible authority", notwithstanding that the airport may be outside their district.

(c) At a privately owned airport the "responsible authority" are the local authority for the district in which the airport is situated.

A "responsible authority" as such are concerned only with the application of the Public Health (Aircraft) Regulations. Other matters such as the enforcement of the Imported Food Regulations, sanitary services at the airport, etc., are the general concern of the local authority for a district; at a "National airport" vested in or under the control of the Department of Trade (Civil Aviation Dept.) (into which, being Crown property, the local authority have no right of entry) arrangements for these matters are made between the controlling Department and the local authority.

The general scope of the Public Health (Aircraft) Regulations is similar to that of the Public Health (Ships) Regulations, the powers of the Airport Medical Officer being broadly the same, but additional precautions are embodied in their application as (unlike voyage by ships from the usual infected areas) the time taken to come from those areas by air can be less than the incubation period of the more dangerous infectious diseases.

The expenditure of "responsible authorities" in operating the health control at "national airports" is wholly reimbursed by the Exchequer.

Certain Royal Air Force airfields and Royal Naval Air stations have been designated Customs airports for the first landing of Service aircraft entering the United Kingdom. The Service medical authorities apply health control to any aircraft (Service or civilian) alighting at one of these airports. The control is broadly on the same lines as that operated at civilian airports. The Commander of a Service aircraft landing at a civilian airport is expected to comply and to ensure compliance with the civilian control.

Review by M. CAMPBELL LEE, OBE, FIH
Director of Housing, City of Nottingham

Without a doubt the most widely discussed document on housing in 1977/8 was the long awaited government's Green Paper Housing Policy: a consultative document and as such must figure prominently in this review.

The investigation which resulted in the Green Paper was initiated by the late Anthony Crossland in 1974 as a "searching and far reaching enquiry" into housing finance. The aim was to go back to fundamentals, "to get beyond a housing policy of 'ad-hoc'ery' and crisis management" and find out precisely what is needed to be done if the desperate social problems of housing were to be solved. The enquiry was subsequently extended to cover a much wider field of housing policy. It was still generally hoped that, against this wider background, some radical reforms in housing would be produced for public discussion.

The first thing that can be said about the Green Paper is that it rejects all the radical solutions proposed for solving the Country's housing problems. It did not advocate the abolition of the private landlord, it did not favour selling a major part of the Council housing stock; it did not call for the elimination of tax relief for mortages; it did not suggest allowing private sector rents to rise to market levels. It takes a moderate, middle of the road view of housing issues, perhaps recognizing the government's political situation, and makes modest suggestions for useful improvements to the system here and there. When you consider that nearly 10 million households were living unsatisfactory conditions in 1951; that by 1976 this figure had fallen to 2·7 million and there is no longer an absolute shortage of houses, the government would probably argue that for these reasons no revolutionary policy changes are recommended. Thus the tone of the document in that generally, the path taken in the past has been the correct one and that greater flexibility and more local responsibility are the over-riding requirements.

With regard to housing finance and subsidies, the whole exercise of the Green Paper started out as I have already mentioned as a review of housing finance and I was disappointed to find that this aspect has been submerged. A basic problem of public sector housing provision is that the tenant is not aware of the actual costs of the service provided and this often leads to increased expectations of that service. Two steps are important, firstly rent must make a greater contribution towards total cost and secondly subsidies should be directed to people and not to properties. Under the Green Paper proposals it would appear that the level of assistance a family is able to obtain hinges on where they happen to live as opposed to their particular circumstances.

The government considers that to secure an adequate supply of housing of acceptable standards at a price within the reach of all families, housing investment must continue to be supported by general assistance. Public sector housing investment must be directed more selectively and this can be achieved through local authorities developing their own strategies spanning both the public and private sectors and involving building societies, housing associations and the building industry, within the framework of a national policy. This was the theory which lay behind the Housing Investment Programme and as such was to be welcomed since it appeared to give more power to local authorities. However, as I hinted in the Housing Review last year and as we have seen in many areas the outcome has not been as envisaged due to the restrictions brought about by a lack of finance. In real terms Central Government now has a tighter control on finance and has left local authorities with the "discretion" of deciding where to make the cuts and hence carry the blame. Increasing concern has been expressed several times during the last year at the underspending of housing capital allocations by some local authorities. Underspending is affected by problems in forecasting and programming projects which are affected by a wider range of uncertain elements ranging from the weather to the detailed controls operated by the Department of the Environment regional offices. However some of the blame for underspending must be attributed to the Government for their delay in informing local authorities of their allocations.

Perhaps more worrying than underspending is the evidence that some authorities in order to boost spending in the last months of the year, brought forward lower priority projects which could be carried out rapidly. In such cases, far from producing more conscious coherent and planned local housing programmes, the Housing Investment Programme allocation system would seem to be distorting priorities. A crucial problem with the Housing Investment Programme system is the requirement upon local authorities that they commit themselves to programmes of expenditure in distinct twelve month periods. Important projects may not sub divide so easily into the calendar and therefore may suffer as a local authority juggles its priorities rather than underspend its allocation. In order to obtain optimum benefit from the Housing Investment Programme a local authority must be permitted to exercise more discretion with regard to its spending whilst Central Government should guarantee a high degree of continuity for an agreed programme in future years. If such a guarantee is not forthcoming then there seems little point in an authority setting out the proposals for its housing investment for a four year period.

With regard to renovation policy a government proposal in the Green Paper was to redirect resources from relatively high quality renovation of the stock which is not in the worst condition to spending less per unit on more of the worst houses. This is acceptable provided that the dwellings concerned have a reasonable life. Improvement to short life dwellings is not easily encouraged since it is often viewed as uneconomic investment. The easing of repair grants to facilitate this re direction of resources is a welcome move but the government ought to have gone further and removed the restrictions which limits such grants to cases of hardship since grants of this type are essential to the retention of areas of housing. The attractiveness of improvement grants has waned since 1974 for a number of reasons. We must have regular reviews of improvement grant levels to get them to a point where they are a real incentive while still ensuring that they are directed towards those in need. Last year's increases were too little and too late.

The situation is urgent and vital for the prosperity and well being of a vast number of people and the country as a whole. Rehabilitation cannot be isolated from the provision of new houses or a further important aspect of housing that of on going maintenance in all sectors. Housing Departments must, for no other body will, take a full responsibility for all housing within their area. Rehabilitation is vitally important now because it has been neglected for so long, but there must not be a blind reliance on improvement for the future, as there was for new building during the 1950's and 1960's. An adequately financed total strategy is demanded with local authorities given the freedom to persue the policies relevant to their needs.

We must continue to remind ourselves that housing is not just about bricks and mortar, but about people. The Green Paper gave support to this statement by way of its heavy emphasis on a flexible sensitive social approach to policy and administration with such proposals as "liberalization" of allocation schemes, a charter for council tenants, responsibility for the homeless, better provision for one parent families, ethnic minorities, battered wives, the disabled and handicapped and social criteria in mortgage lending. These proposals relating to the "priority categories" illustrate the tremendous pressure on local authorities to cater for such groups but more than this, with so many special needs groups arising it makes the point that there can be no real priority for anyone. It must also be borne in mind that there still exists for some if not all of these priority groups a great responsibility to be accepted by other agencies in the form of preventative and rehabilitation work. It is only through a joint approach to the problem that any effective measures can be taken to ease the plight of those with unfortunate circumstances.

In the case of one of the above mentioned groups, namely the homeless, the lack of cooperation had got to the stage where the govenment decided that new legislation was necessary. Up until December 1977 the only clear statutory provision on homelessness was in Section 21(1) (b) of the National Assistance Act 1948 which required social service authorities to make arrangements for the provision of accommodation for those in urgent need of it.

Government Circular 18/74 issued in February 74 suggested that housing authorities rather than social service authorities should in future accept responsibility for providing accommodation for the homeless. Not all housing authorities accepted responsibility in accordance with the Circular and this led to the pressure for legislation. The Housing (Homeless Persons) Act 1977 which came into effect on 1st December 1977 places the statutory duty to provide for the homeless on housing authorities. The Government also issued a circular and a code of guidance, on which local authority associations had been consulted, to help housing authorities in the implementation of the Act. Local authorities are expected to treat with sensitivity anyone who is homeless or threatened with homelessness, and have to obtain sufficient information to establish an applicant's precise situation and whether they fall into the priority categories, for whom they must ensure some sort of accommodation. The priority categories include people with dependent children, pregnant women, households including the elderly, frail or disabled and people caught up in an emergency such as fire or flood. An authority's responsibility is limited if it is convinced that homelessness is intentional.

A further piece of legislation of importance to housing authorities was Part II of the Criminal Law Act 1977 which also came into effect in December 1977. Sections 6–13 provide a new statutory code on squatting, replacing the old common law provisions and the Statutes of Forcible Entry. With regard to squatting the Act is designed to protect displaced residential occupiers and intending occupiers who have been allocated a house by a local authority, new town, or registered housing association but who are prevented by squatters from moving in.

All of the foregoing serve to illustrate the tremendous breadth of the housing function today. Unfortunately as new functions appeared and new sections sprang up to deal with them little or no effort was made to keep staff abreast of the rapid advances being made. Consequently the staff in the field on the day to day jobs are often out of touch with policy. The Housing Services Advisory Group's report on training and the City University's report both draw attention to the fact that we are woefully in need of in-service training. Ways must be found to create a relationship at all levels so that the staff can understand policies and so that policy makers can also get the feedback from the people for whom the service is being provided. It follows that staff who are in touch with policy and can identify with the reasons for the decisions are able to give more information and personal help, in other words a better service, because of it.

There is little doubt that one of the most important requirements for the development of a successful housing policy is the establishment of effective channels of communication between policy makers and those who implement the policy at all levels, between central and local government and between those at the top in housing departments and those at the "door step" level.

Two moves in the right direction have been the setting up of a permanent Housing Services Advisory Unit under the directorship of William Woof, FIH and the invaluable work of the Housing Services Advisory Group on such topics as Access and Allocations Policies, Assessment of Housing Requirements, Organising a Comprehensive Housing Service, Training for Housing Work, Tenancy Agreements, The Client role in Public Sector Housebuilding and which is aimed at providing guidance in, and an understanding of the complexities of housing.

THE HOUSING CORPORATION

149 Tottenham Court Road, London, W1P 0BN (01-387 9466).

Chairman: Sir Lou Sherman, OBE, JP.

Chief Executive: J. R. Madge, CB.

The Housing Corporation is a Government agency, set up under Part I of the Housing Act 1964. Its Board members are appointed by the Secretaries of State for the Environment, for Scotland and for Wales acting jointly. The Corporation presents to the Secretaries an annual report and audited accounts, which are laid before Parliament.

Under the Housing Act 1964 the Corporation had a duty to promote and assist the development of housing societies building for letting at non-profit cost rents or on a co-ownership basis. £100 m. was made available to the Corporation from the National Loans for onward lending to societies to finance the development schemes.

Under Section 77 of the Housing Finance Act 1972 the Corporation was given the additional duty to assist housing associations (as defined in the Housing Act 1957) building for letting at "fair rents" and was enabled to borrow more money from the National Loans for the purpose.

The Corporation was given greatly extended powers under the 1974 Housing Act, and is now responsible for financing, supervising and promoting non profitmaking housing associations throughout the UK. Most of the homes (new and improved) financed by the Corporation since then have been let at "fair rents" fixed by the local rent officer, and are subsidized by Housing Association Grant. Under Parts I to III of the 1974 Act, only the 2,600 associations registered with the Housing Corporation are eligible for loan finance from the Corporation or local authorities. Corporation priorities for funding are inner city rehabilitation and housing for people with special needs, thus complementing local authority provision.

Annual allocations are made after consultation conferences with housing associations, taking their capacities into account, and based on housing need, particularly as identified by local authorities.

In 1977, the Corporation was given Treasury approval to borrow limited additional finance on the private market through the Housing Corporation Finance Company Ltd.

Under the 1974 Act, the Corporation's powers to acquire and develop land were widened, and it can exercise compulsory purchase powers in certain circumstances. Section 19 of the Act gives the Corporation extensive inquiry powers into the affairs of a registered association. Section 20 empowers it to remove committee members or officers and appoint others where necessary.

During 1977/78, loans were approved as follows:

CO-OPERATIVE HOUSING AGENCY

180 Tottenham Court Rd., London, W1P 9LE (01-636 2261).

Director: John Hands.

A housing co-operative is an association of people which owns and controls an enterprise whose main purpose is to provide, manage and maintain housing for its members. It is a form of housing tenure relatively common in several north European countries and in parts of north America. In Britain it has only begun to develop relatively recently.

The Co-operative Housing Agency was established in 1976 as an agency of the Housing Corporation to provide guidance, training and support for these newly-developing housing co-operatives. The Agency sets out to promote the principles and techniques of co-operative housing, to act as a national resource centre for co-operative education in housing and as a source of pressure for an appropriate and adequate legislative, administrative and financial framework for housing co-operatives.

It provides direct assistance to co-operatives through its specialist officers who are available to give advice on legal, financial, educational, project development and housing management matters.

A number of publications are produced by the Agency, a bi-monthly newsletter (CHAT), an annual Directory of Housing Co-operatives, introductory leaflets on housing co-operatives, a set of information, education sheets for groups at the first stages of forming a housing co-operative, and more detailed handbooks on such topics as rules, finance and housing management. In addition, the Agency published the Housing Corporation Advisory Committee on Co-operatives' response to the Government's Housing Policy Review as the pamphlet, "Co-operatives and Housing Policy".

HOUSING SERVICES ADVISORY UNIT OF THE DEPARTMENT OF THE ENVIRONMENT

Director: William Woof, FIH.

The Housing Services Advisory unit was set up in 1978. It is intended to help in providing advice on housing policy to Ministers and the Department and also provide an opportunity for exchanging information and practical advice on housing management with local authorities. The aim will be to bring together the best practice throughout the country, wherever it is to be found. The Unit will be based in London, at DoE Headquarters, but will do much of its work through the Department's Regional Offices*. The normal way for local authorities to approach the Unit will be through the DoE's Regional Offices, but some contacts will also be initiated direct.

Among the other early interest of the Unit are likely to be such issues as:
—access to public housing and the detailed allocation of homes to people;
—the problems of unpopular estates and how they can be reduced;
—the right relationship between tenants and public sector landlords, as discussed in the Department's Consultation Paper on a Tenants' Charter;
—the costs of management and maintenance.

* Regional offices of the DoE are listed in Section 31.

THE INSTITUTE OF HOUSING

Victoria Hse., Southampton Row, London, WC1B 4EB (01-242 3267/8).

Originally known as the Institute of Housing Managers, the present Institute of Housing was formed in 1965 as the result of a merger of the former Institute of Housing with the Society of Housing Managers. Since that time it has been the professional body in Britain exclusively concerned with the practice of housing, its standards and ideals, and the education and training of the people engaged in it.

Its main aims are to promote the profession of housing practice in both the public and private sectors; to provide the central organization for those engaged in the profession; and to provide opportunities for the dissemination of knowledge on the subject of housing.

In order to achieve these aims, the Institute performs a wide range of functions. It offers a Diploma in housing for which it is the examining body. It organizes a variety of short training courses on housing management. It organizes an annual national conference with an associated housing exhibition, as well as holding a number of regional conferences. It carries out research into housing management issues on behalf of the Department of the Environment. It publishes the monthly journal "Housing" together with a Year book and list of members. It represents the profession in responding, at national level, to policy and legislative proposals, and advises, both nationally and locally, on the organization of the housing service and associated professional practice.

The Institute has a membership of over 5,000, and branches throughout the United Kingdom and in Hong Kong.

Secretary: Dennis J. Crouch.

President 1978/79: M. A. Smith, MBE, FIH, Director of Housing Management, City of Glasgow.

The Association builds either by using contractors or its own building department. At present SSHA owns over 90,000 houses which are managed partly by its own staff and partly by local authorities as agents of the Association.

LICENSING AND REGISTRATION

C—County Councils, D—District Councils, LB—London Boroughs, GLC—Greater London Council.

Local authorities have a wide range of duties for the protection of the public, as the following enactments show. Other responsibilities designed for the protection of the public include: licensing of persons and premises, registration of persons and premises, inspection of premises and enforcement of the laws. To list some of them is to indicate their scope.

The authorities empowered to license, register, inspect and enforce vary from Act to Act. County Councils and County Borough Councils have, in the past, had the most powers. Some Acts permit the designated authority to delegate its powers either to other authorities or to Petty Sessional Courts or Standing Joint Committees. Following reorganization many of the licensing duties are reallocated to District Councils.

The following is a list of Subjects, Governing Acts, and Powers and Duties.

Local Education Authorities licence children for employment in entertainment and the Secretary of State has power to make regulations by statutory instrument governing the employment of children and young persons.

The list above though comprising many of the varied responsibilities of local authorities is by no means comprehensive. For example, mention has not been made of the provision in the Shops Act 1950, permitting Jewish Traders to open on Sundays if registered for that purpose; neither have the special powers granted to many authorities in private Acts.

The ways and means by which Councils carry out their functions are many. Some large authorities concentrate the bulk of the work in a separate department under an independent Chief Officer, as a study of the Principal Officers in the Main Directory will show. They name it the Public Control Department and it is an apt title. (Other authorities distribute the tasks among various departments and a variety of staff.) It is probably accurate to say that, exclusive of the licensing work, a proportion of these diverse duties falls on the shoulders of the Inspectors of Weights and Measures and that Public Health Inspectors get their fair share of the burden in many areas.

Licensing of places of entertainment:

- Public music and dancing and boxing and wrestling licences under Schedule 12 of the London Government Act 1963;
- Licences for private music and dancing promoted for private gain, under the Private Places of Entertainment (Licensing) Act 1967, for all areas in Greater London, except Enfield;
- Cinematograph licences under the Cinematograph Acts 1909 and 1952;
- Licences for the public performance of plays under the Theatres Act 1968;

Licensing of tracks for betting under Schedule 3 of the Betting, Gaming and Lotteries Act 1963.

Issue of safety certificates for designated stadiums under the Safety of Sports Grounds Act 1975.

Issue of Exhibition Licences under G. L. C. General Powers Act 1966.

Other licensing matters (except licensing of employment agencies which is dealt with by the Department of Employment) fall to be dealt with by the London Boroughs.

DRIVER AND VEHICLE LICENSING

The Secretary of State for Transport (formerly Environment) took over legal responsibility for the licensing of drivers and the registration and licensing of vehicles on 1 April 1971.

DRIVER LICENSING

All driving licences, other than Heavy Goods Vehicle (HGV) and Public Service Vehicle (PSV) licences, are issued by the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Centre in Swansea. The legal framework for driver licensing is contained mainly in two statutes: The Road Traffic Act 1972 and the Road Traffic Act 1974. Full licences now issued are normally valid until the holder's 70th birthday while provisional licences are valid for one year only.

VEHICLE REGISTRATION AND LICENSING

Vehicle registration and licensing is carried out by Local Vehicle Licensing Offices (LVLO). There are 81 of these offices which register vehicles for the first time and issue the vehicle licence. Details of each registration are forwarded by the LVLO to DVLC. Once a vehicle's record is held at DVLC subsequent licence renewals may be made either by post or over the counter at any LVLO or alternatively over the counter at any Licensing Post Office using the automatic renewal reminder form VII issued by the centre. There is a separate Vehicle Licensing Office at 15 West Bell St., Dundee DD11 1HB which handles all postal applications for licence renewals from Greater London. Licence applications should not be sent direct to DVLC.

GENERAL ENQUIRIES

Any enquiries on driver or vehicle registration or licensing matters may be directed to either the Driver Enquiry Unit (0792 72151) or Vehicle Enquiry Unit (0972) 72134 as appropriate.

INSTITUTE OF MARKET OFFICERS: 338

ORGANIZATIONS CONCERNED WITH MARKETS ADMINISTRATION 351

Review by S. R. GEE, MInstMO
Hon. Secretary, Institute of Market Officers

Local authorities are still experiencing difficulty in dealing with Sunday markets as no new legislation or amendment to existing law has been forthcoming. Fewer prosecutions have been made under the Shops Act concerning Sunday markets. Although statistics can be made to prove almost anything these figures show that the Home Office's reminder to authorities that it is their duty to enforce the Shops Act concerning Sunday trading is not being pursued as rigorously as it might be. Some councils have used local planning laws and charter rights as well as High Court injunctions to prosecute offenders for Sunday trading. A market club which opened on Sundays on an industrial estate at Exhall near Coventry was said by magistrates to be a sham designed solely to circumvent the Sunday Trading Act. Prosecution by the Nuneaton Borough Council resulted in fines of over £500 being imposed.

However last February at Westminster a meeting was organized by the Institute of Shops, Health and Safety Acts Administration in order to consider a private bill that the Institute wished to promote aimed at amending the law relating to Sunday trading. Leading retail organizations, trade unions, the National Market Traders Federation, the National Association of British Market Authorities and other interested parties were invited to attend. The Institute hoped that the 5th Schedule of the Act might be amended to provide for all food and drink to be sold up to a stated time and that shops should remain open during the stated time with staff being allowed compensatory time off. They also suggested that local authorities should be allowed to make orders for shops for the sale of food and other items permitted legally at holiday resorts. It was also suggested that the Shops Act should also apply to Scotland. The proposed bill was opposed by Mr. Charles Dodd, Chairman of the Board of Management of the National Chamber of Trade. He said that large firms would have to open on Sundays which would tend to increase their overheads. Opposition to any extension of the Sunday trading law was expressed by Mr. J. H. Bailey, Secretary of the National Association of British Market Authorities, and Sunday markets other than traditional and legal ones were also opposed by Mr. B. Wainwright, Secretary of the National Market Traders' Federation. The conclusion formed as a result of this meeting, at which Dr. Shirley Summerskill, Minister of State at the Home Office had been an interested listener, was that there should be no relaxation of the present laws governing Sunday trading.

The Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 came into operation on the 1st February 1978. It is of particular interest to market authorities, market traders and stall holders because it controls attempts to exclude or limit liability for negligence arising in the course of business. It renders ineffective any attempt by contract term or notice to exclude or limit liability for negligence resulting in death or personal injury. These changes may result in market authorities and their tenants being put at greater risk than in the past of being sued in tort for negligence. Authorities are advised by the Department of Prices and Consumer Protection to ensure that they are adequately insured and traders should carry adequate public liability insurance. If it is made a condition of occupancy that a public liability insurance policy is to be taken out by the tenant many tenancy and licence agreements will have to be amended. This could lead to problems in the insertion of a new clause in the Landlord and Tenant Act 1954 Part II. One would expect that any trader holding a tenancy agreement of a permanent nature would be covered adequately for public liability. It would appear that many more market authorities will require proof of public liability cover before space is allocated in the market. Indeed this has already happened.

The new Slaughterhouse (Hygiene) Regulations 1977 became effective on the 11th May 1978 and they considerably tighten up existing regulations. They forbid the use of items such as chopping blocks, cutting surfaces and handles of implements (including knives) which are made of wood. Taps supplying wash basins in the slaughterhouse must not be operable by hand or arm. The bleeding and dressing processes are not to be carried out on the floor and no carcase must come into contact with the floor or wall surfaces in any part of the slaughterhall. However slaughterhouses operating before the 11th May 1978 have been given a breathing space until the 11th November 1980 to comply with these instructions. Receptacles for the removal of stomachs, intestines and trimmings must have closely fitting covers. Horns of cattle must be removed at the time of flaying. The smaller public slaughterhouses will have a considerable financial liability in bringing their premises up to the required standard.

Bradford's 8 years old John Street Market was destroyed by fire at the beginning of November last year. About 150 stallholders were affected and the cost is expected to exceed £1 million. It was opened in August 1969 and had a translucent honeycombed pattern roof designed to give an open style effect. Due to tremendous efforts by the markets staff 74 stallholders were able to operate from a site on Rawson Road car park 8 days after the fire.

Plans to link Lincoln's 3 city centre markets in a more modern shopping complex look certain to receive the go-ahead. The City Council Planning Committee have approved in principle the redevelopment of Sincil Street, Cornhill and Market Areas.

Glasgow Corporation have extended their group of wholesale markets at Blochairn by the opening last April of their new Wholesale Fish Market at a cost of £500,000. It was built to a design produced by the traders and the Markets Department and operates on an open stance layout with a surrounding gallery housing tenants' offices and ancillary buildings provide cold storage facilities.

Medway District Council are setting up a special working party to investigate plans to erect a £750,000 public covered market at Chatham. It is proposed to have a 5 storey car park with the ground floor being used as a planned market with lock-up units.

Leeds City Council plan to open a 3 days per week market for the benefit of residents of the Lower Wortley housing estate.

Stallholders successfully petitioned the Sheffield City Council to retain the open market held at Moorfoot. This had originally only been intended to operate for a limited time as the site was required by the Manpower Commission for office building. However another site has been found which is reasonably near to the original site.

The National Market Traders' conference was held in Coventry last April when Mr. H. A. Perkins was elected President. He has been acting in that capacity for the last 10 months due to the death of Mrs. Flo. Gaunt and now commences his official 2 year term of office. Mr. B. McClure of Nottingham was elected Senior Vice-President and the Junior Vice-President is Mr. A. E. Frith of Coventry. It is interesting to note that the Federation now has official representation in Parliament, three MPs (one from each major party) having agreed to carry out this function.

At the Annual Conference of the National Association of the British Market Authorities held in Newcastle last September Councillor L. McDonald of Shrewsbury was elected President and Councillor J. Gilmore of Manchester became President-Elect. Councillor Mrs. Mary Rees of West Lancashire District Council was nominated Vice-President.

The Institute of Market Officers held a successful conference in Manchester last June at which Mr. D. G. M. Johnston, Director of Markets for Manchester, was elected President. Mr. A. Fretwell was nominated as President-Elect -Mr. Fretwell is Markets Manager for Barnsley Metropolitan District Council. The Institute's 6th Residential Course was held in Sheffield last October and still continues to be well attended.

It is with deep regret that I have to report the death of Councillor R. Craine last October aged 62 years. He was a former Mayor of Liverpool and had served as Chairman of the National Association of British Market Authorities. He was very interested in market affairs and was one of the British representatives on the international committee dealing with wholesale markets. Another well-known figure, Mr. Jack Field, General Secretary of the Showmen's Guild since July 1972 died last year. He had formerly been Assistant Secretary of the Guild since 1948.

In conclusion I must refer to the severe lack of status that Market Officers have suffered due to local government reorganisation and the result of this "relegation" is now becoming apparent. It is felt that if market officers do not obtain better recognition in the present local government system a lot of younger potential market officers may be lost to private enterprise and possibly to private market operators. Private markets are now much more numerous than in previous years and local authorities will have to compete to maintain their position with rivals and offer more incentive to their market officers. Nevertheless markets continue to flourish and make a useful contribution to local government revenue.

INSTITUTE OF MARKET OFFICERS

The Institute of Market Officers was formed in 1943 with the following principal objects:

(a) To provide an organization for Market Officers and to improve the administration of Markets, Fairs, Abattoirs and Cold Stores by fostering a knowledge of the work required for their efficient management.

(b) To encourage the study of all questions connected with the administration of markets, abattoirs and allied undertakings under the control of public authorities.

(c) To hold meetings for discussion of matters related to markets administration and for social intercourse amongst members.

(d) To hold examinations and grant Diplomas to members on attaining the required standards.

(e) To carry out any other acts on behalf of the members for the furtherance of the interests and objects of the Institute.

Membership of the Institute is open to persons who are employed by Public Authorities and engaged in the administration of Markets (Retail and Wholesale), Fairs, Abattoirs or Cold Stores. Classes of membership are as follows:

(a) Students.
(b) Licentiates—Persons over 45 years of age with more than 5 years' experience and in receipt of a salary over a specified figure.
(c) Associates—Persons who have passed Part I of the Institute's Examinations.
(d) Members—Persons who have passed Parts I & II of the Institute's Examinations.

A short residential course is organized each year in order to help students with their studies and various study papers are available. Over 110 different authorities are represented amongst the members of the Institute. Area meetings and seminars are held at various times during the year when opportunities are available to inspect new market developments. The Institute's Examinations are included in the approved list of examinations recognized for promotion by local authorities.

President 1978/1979: A. Fretwell, MInstMQ, Markets Manager, Barnsley Metropolitan District Council, Upper May Day Green Arcade, Barnsley (Barnsley 203391).

Hon. Secretary: S. R. Gee, MInstMO, The Abattoir, Cricket Inn Rd., Sheffield, S2 5BD (0742 738771).

MARKETS AND ABATTOIRS

Information on the local government management of markets and abattoirs is compiled from replies to a questionnaire sent to London Boroughs and all District Councils in England, Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland. Some one hundred nil returns were received, and these revealed that a few small markets are under the control of Local Councils, particularly those which have Town Council status under section 245(6) of the Local Government Act, 1972 (see Section 35). All markets are retail unless otherwise stated, and the number of days open each week is indicated.

FAIRS

The Municipal Year Book continues in this edition a survey of fairs held and/or licensed by London boroughs and district councils in England and Wales. The information may well prove to be of interest to historians, but the purpose of asking local authorities to complete questionnaires was to establish a directory on one of the lesser known duties of local government, a duty, nevertheless, which adds responsibility to officers such as chief executives, directors of technical services, and directors and managers of parks and recreation grounds. The survey sought to concentrate on long established fairs and carnivals but includes some itinerant amusement caterers, whose visits are of a casual or irregular nature.

NATIONAL PARKS

As provided in Local Government Act 1972, the administration of national parks from 1 April 1974 became the responsibility of new National Park Committees or, in the case of the Lake District and the Peak District National Parks, a new special or joint planning board. It is the duty of the county council to establish the new committee for each national park. For a park comprised in two or more counties (a multi county park) the committee is to be established by one of the councils by agreement, or in the absence of such agreement jointly by the councils concerned. The planning boards are constituted by orders made by the Secretary of State for the Environment under Section 1 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1971. In all cases, with the approval of the Secretary of State, after consultation with the Countryside Commission, the new park authority may be given responsibilities in respect of land outside the area of the national park. A third of the members of these park authorities are appointed by the Secretary of State for the Environment and the Secretary of State for Wales as appropriate on the recommendation of the Countryside Commission, their staffs are headed by a National Park Officer. It is the responsibility of these authorities to conserve and enhance the natural beauty and amenity of the parks and to promote their enjoyment by the public. Special supplementary block grants are paid in accordance with the provisions of the Local Government Act 1974 towards the total costs of administering the parks for the national benefit.

National parks are not publicly owned and designation confers on the public no right of access; in fact, much of the land, farmland, for instance, is in private ownership, as elsewhere. Rights of access in national parks are the same as in other parts of the countryside and any additional access facilities have to be specially negotiated by agreement with the landowner or, failing agreement, by an access order. The ten national parks, listed below, extend over 5,258 square miles, about 9 per cent of the total area of England and Wales. There are warden services and information centres in the parks to help visitors. The Countryside Commission issue a free booklet about the parks which lists the information centres.

The following notes include the names, addresses and telephone numbers of the national parks authorities and of their officers. The Editor is grateful for the help of the Countryside Commission and of the County Councils Association, along with the Country Treasurers Society in extending the information this year to include services provided for the public in each park.

Director: Leonard G. Johnes,, OBE, Solicitor.

Architect: John M. V. Bishop, DA(Edin), ARIBA, MRTPI.

It is a body composed of representatives appointed from their membership by the Greater London Council, the Hertfordshire and Essex County Councils and 9 London Boroughs and District Councils. This project is the first practical example of a "green wedge" policy as opposed to a green belt policy, bringing the countryside into areas of dense population.

The duty of the Authority is to develop the Park area of about 10,000 acres in the Lee Valley for recreation, sport, entertainment and the enjoyment of leisure. The project is financed by precept on the Greater London Council and the Hertfordshire and Essex County Councils.

Review by JOHN C. ALDERSON, QPM, FBIM

Chief Constable, Devon and Cornwall Constabulary

Nineteen seventy-seven was the year in which the police began to face up to the prospect of seeking improvement without expansion. The halt in the hitherto seeming unending flow of resources to which the police had become accustomed for over twenty years demanded fresh thinking. It was now a question of ideas. The debate on the adequacy or otherwise of police resources had come to the boil in the previous year when the Police Federation mounted a fairly impressive publicity campaign under the title "Dear Fellow Citizen" and sought improvements in quality and quantity of a public-backed improvement in resources. The campaign failed to attract significant reaction from the Government but paradoxically it gave rise to fresh thinking which gained momentum in 1977 to register new interest in preventive policing. If the police were to cope at all with increasing problems without significant increases in resources, new ideas would be needed.

Sensing that a new philosophy of community involvement in preventive policing offered beleaguered government an alternative to the resources solution the Home Office staged a top level conference at Ditchley Park in Oxfordshire. The subject was "Preventive Policing" and the consequences of the debate rippled throughout the decision making echelons of the Service. Sporadic experiments in preventive policing were set up in various forces and the year closed with the debate still in lively condition.

One effect was to re-examine the whole concept of policing. The role of other agencies such as probation, social and welfare services, and even education, were examined to see whether the fabric of preventive measures was indeed a combined operation with the police playing a guiding role. The pooling of valuable resources was seen as a worthwhile objective even though professional sensitivities and prejudices proved well entrenched. The beginning of an inter-agency or inter-disciplinary debate on preventing crime by attacking causes made a start, albeit a sluggish or cautious one. In some areas the civic-conscious element of the public was pressed to consider its own wider involvement in preventive measures by supporting the police in seeking to reduce causes of crime. Some ideas went so far as to harness public involvement in recreational and youth schemes as well as in other ameliorative measures such as improved street lighting, public transport facilities, and self-help policing measures short of vigilantism. The steady movement towards involving and enlightening the public was matched by an equally important one in changing the attitudes, habits and expectations of the police themselves. Here the Police College at Bramshill played a leading part by instituting a new course of studies in preventive policing. Designed to educate the police leaders of the future in more professional considerations of their role, the arrangements involved many of society's leading thinkers.

In the first place the police had to acknowledge that they were becoming a primarily reactive force only responding to minor and major crises and meeting the public less and less in normal non-conflict interactions. This in turn was producing a gulf between police and public which rendered mutual co-operation less certain. More opportunity for suspicion and in some areas even for antipathy was eroding traditional police/public relations at an unwholesome speed. Panda cars, personal radios, computers and command and control systems had produced the technological cop. Notice had to be taken but even more important was the need for corrective action through deliberate policies aimed at restoring the bridges of public contact. Preventive concepts might help.

As taught at Bramshill and at some regional higher police training centres, modern preventive policing was seen to have not only the negative role of controlling the bad but of equal importance was that of activating the good. This new philosophy was called pro-active policing and was to go some way towards producing new initiatives in modern policing techniques. If preventive policing was to involve more of society's latent energy it had to be defined in appropriate forms. From this requirement arose the concepts of primary, secondary and tertiary prevention.

Primary prevention was essentially seen to be pro-active (getting ahead of the game) and involved the whole of society. It covers any activity which accrues to the diminution of criminal conduct. At the highest level it involved joint action by Government Departments, a good example being the co-operation between the Home Office and the Department of Health and Social Security in bringing about better understanding and more efficient inter-agency co-operation to identify and deal with the battered baby problem. Another important example was the growth of co-operation between education and police departments to bring pupils and police into meaningful contact. Apart from advising staff in dealing with errant pupils and in school crime, police schemes were developed into citizenship courses, and problem areas such as dangerous drugs, motoring offences and the cost of crime generally were introduced into school studies. In this primary level of preventive policing new initiatives abounded. Evening and even day adult classes were organized by police, community policing consultative groups were formed, police public contact schemes were set up, management and trade union organizations were contacted, and efforts to create public understanding through lectures in halls, churches, and on radio and television, as well as through newspapers, showed considerable increase.

Secondary prevention was considered to apply to the normal police function of preventive patrol, both foot and mobile, with accent more on the former where possible, the so called "scarecrow" and traditional function of the police. It was recognised that considerable numbers of new elements now formed part, a large part, of secondary prevention. Private security companies, traffic wardens and other auxiliaries as well as industrial and departmental police forces had to be added to conventional police when considering levels of preventive policing. When all these forces are added together and coupled with the preventive role of other social and legal services the allocation of society's resources to prevention is considerably advanced—though never enough. Interest in the Special Constabulary or citizen police reserve quickened after a Home Office Working Party had reported favourably on a new look organization to strengthen police resources in emergencies. The public feeling that the police on the beat were the best means of preventing offences struck a chord within the police, and some effort was made in places to allocate more of the scarce resources to traditional police beat duties.

Tertiary preventive measures were considered to include the detective function, probation, prison, and after care services. If the certainty of detection could be vigorously pursued this in itself would have a significant preventive effect. But as the penal policies aimed to decrease prison population and increase the granting of bail to accused persons on remand, it was acknowledged in the police service that the price for the more humane approach would almost certainly be increases in criminal conduct. There remained the possibility that segregation of young tyro criminals from the institutionalized harder committed criminals might in some cases go towards prevention of recidivism, though this required a large dose of faith in human nature, not always realized in practical affairs.

Realization that scarcer police resources needed to be more intelligently deployed raised in an acute form the whole question of research and operational information. Relying on crude forms of criminal statistics or empirical guess work was just not acceptable. The sciences of demography, sociology (long denigrated by practitioners), market research, and criminology would have to be prayed in aid of future police strategy and tactics. Realization of this brought response from the Home Office Scientific and Research Branches and together with a number of forces pilot schemes for the gathering of more accurate information on police problems were introduced. It was now to become possible for police commanders not to commit their forces to tasks based on intuition and traditional guess work but in line with public wishes, needs, and demands. Furthermore this kind of research and information gathering was to come at a time when smaller and cheaper computers were coming on to the market, and the combination of this technology with better information could well reform and modernise the art of deployment of police resources, which is of such crucial importance at the present time.

So the year witnessed the dilemma of coping with the conflicting human forces of greater individual freedom and permissiveness on the one hand and the growth of crime and public disorder with outmatched police resources on the other. The developing understanding of the broad aims of preventive policing promises a little enlightenment only. The fusion of social policing and legal policing by strengthening social discipline and community policing, as well as greater public co-operation with the best efforts of the professional police, seemed to offer an alternative to pessimistic apathy and inactivity borne out of frustration. The police began to realize that in times of social and economic deterioration "all hands to the pump" was to be a better philosophy than purely technological coppery and Olympian isolation if social anxieties and tensions were in any way to be relaxed. But if anxieties and tensions within communities pressed upon a fully stretched service the impact within the police was certainly not greater than the conflict between the Police Federation and the Government and police authorities over pay negotiations.

Dissatisfaction with the official side interpretation of government pay restrictions reached a high pitch and revealed the cracks in the whole edifice of negotiating machinery culminating in the staff side of the Police Federation withdrawing unilaterally from the Police Council. Nor were the Superintendents and Chief Police Officers Associations wholly satisfied with the status quo though rocking the boat too much was contrary to their traditions. This in turn raised the whole issue of the rights of police to withdraw labour in support of their demands for more pay. Threats of strike action flew about the country revealing pockets of militancy here and there though in the main the prospect of illegal strike action clearly worried and perplexed the bulk of the service. The news media made hay whilst the intoxicating prospects of some kind of crisis in the traditionally stable police institution shone. The build-up to the annual conference of the Police Federation saw the conflict at its height and the unilateral announcement of a pay increase for the police of 5% to the House of Commons six days before attending the Police Federation Conference at Scarborough which was generally acknowledged to be a courageous course though it certainly threw down the gauntlet to the Federation. The resultant icy and silent reception of the Home Secretary's address usually if only politely applauded was the turning point of the frenzy. The promise of an impartial review and a Government promise to abide by the findings resulted in the setting up of an ad hoc committee by the Home Secretary under the chairmanship of a most distinguished Lord of Appeal, Lord Edmund Davies. A welcome calm fell upon a police service which had come as near to some form of industrial action as at any time since the police strike of 1919. The service was shaken by it all and the experience only revealed how unsuited the police are to industrial action and how important it is for governments and police authorities to so arrange police affairs that the cause for it is never justified. The affair closed with an uneasy truce and uncertain speculations and expectations. The name of Edmund Davies along with Desborough, Willink, and Oaksey, will undoubtedly become a milestone in police affairs.

Shaken by earlier revelations that corruption in the C.I.D. of the Metropolitan Police had gone higher up the tree than had ever been contemplated, the Old Bailey trials of some very senior detective officers not only shook the Metropolitan Police but the entire service felt the body blow. To their eternal credit those left to carry on did so with stoic qualities and none more than the young constables in uniform who stood between public disorder on the streets and the long suffering public.

The year was certainly marked by unacceptable levels of street violence arising out of industrial disputes, football hooliganism and political marches and demonstrations. It can only be a matter for deep concern when police officers who are designated to police teeming suburbs with petty street crime on the increase are diverted to containing public outbursts of mass disorderly behaviour. The increase in house burglaries in the dormitory areas of the cities is another indication that the friendly neighbourhood bobby is up in town on public order duties.

The appearance of perspex shields on the streets of some of our cities was more reminiscent of countries where gendarmerie style public order police are a necessary part of governmental power. It all seemed regrettable though necessary to protect unarmed police from stone throwing mobs. Occasionally the suggestion could be heard that the police should develop a third force of special riot police but nobody really wanted to see the escalation to the point of no return from the tradition that ordinary unarmed police are most fitted to prevent the onset of policing by brute force. If the shield of the centurion had appeared on our streets the heart behind it was still that of a friendly community cop. The patient, long-suffering, self controlled junior officers who, without recourse to offensive weapons of any kind held back the occasional tide of street violence, brought the highest degree of credit to a service which throughout the year had to weather its own innumerable storms.

REVIEW OF THE ELECTRICITY SUPPLY INDUSTRY IN ENGLAND AND WALES

The supply industry in England and Wales provides a service for 20 million customers. During 1976-7 electricity sales to all classes of customers totalled 191,960 million kWh, an increase of 1·3 per cent over the previous year.

The industry's investment plans for new power stations, transmission and distribution lines are based on forecasts made each year for the national maximum demand in the eighth winter ahead. In November 1977 the supply industry adopted a figure of 52,000 MW as the forecast of the national maximum demand for the winter 1984/85; equivalent to an average annual growth rate of about 3 per cent.

New generating plant commissioned by the CEGB in the calendar year 1977 amounted to 344 MW. The forty-nine 500 MW and 660 MW units in service during 1977 provided more than a half of system units at an efficiency of 34·1 per cent.

In the past, short-term peaks in the daily load curve on the electricity supply system have been met mainly by using older "time-expired" plant. Two other methods have been introduced—gas turbine plant and pumped storage amounting to 2,114 MW and 360 MW respectively at the end of 1977. A second pumped-storage station capable of generating up to 1800 MW will be completed at Dinorwic, near Llanberis in 1982.

Load factor improvement has been tackled at the consumers' end with storage heating supplied at special off-peak rates notably through "White Meter" tariffs which offer cheaper units overnight.

In 1975 6 the CEGB introduced a redesigned bulk supply tariff covering its sales to Area Boards which by switching emphasis from the winter peak to daily loads provided further incentive for load factor improvement. The 1977–78 tariff introduced a feature to encourage load disconnections outside winter periods when justified by the plant and load position.

The supply industry's policy is to provide electricity at the lowest total cost to the customer subject to providing a satisfactory service to customers and taking into account environmental considerations. Generation flexibility is maintained by using a variety of fuels, through the use of nuclear power, oil and gas as well as coal firing. Large new coal-fired power stations have been built in various parts of the country, particularly in the Midlands and Yorkshire. Two oil-fired and one dual oil/coal-fired station, each of 2,000 MW capacity, have been commissioned and oil-fired stations of 3,300 MW, 1,980 MW and 1,000 MW capacity are under construction.

The second nuclear programme announced in 1964 provides for a design capacity of 6,500 MW. The reactor design chosen was based on the advanced gas-cooled reactor (AGR) developed by the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority from the magnox system employed in the first nuclear programme. Two AGR stations are in service—at Hinkley Point 'B' in Somerset, and Hunterston 'B' in Strathclyde owned by the South of Scotland Electricity Board. Others are under construction at Hartlepool, Co. Durham, Heysham in Lancashire and Dungeness 'B' in Kent. Each of the stations will have two 660 MW sets. Two more AGR stations will be ordered for commissioning about 1986—at the existing site of Heysham, and at Torness, Lothian by the South of Scotland Electricity Board.

At the end of 1977 the national Grid system owned and operated by the CEGB comprised 137 power stations and over 14,000 circuit kilometres of transmission lines at voltages up to 400 kilovolts (kV) and is the largest fully interconnected system under unified control in the world.

In 1960, in order to increase its power-carrying capacity, the Generating Board decided to raise the voltage of the 275 kV Supergrid to 400 kV and to adopt 400 kV for major new lines. This also has the effect of keeping to a minimum the number of new lines required, thus contributing to the preservation of visual amenities. But 275 kV is being retained in some industrialized areas of high-load density where it is suited to local high-power distribution. The new system is nearing completion. Subsequent development will be largely in the connection of new power stations and the establishment of new tapping points to give increased supplies to the local lower voltage networks. The 400 kV system can probably be made to suffice until at least 1990. Beyond that time there may be a need for a major expansion possibly involving higher voltages.

To investigate the scope for using direct current links in reinforcing their networks the Generating Board have constructed a ±266 kV underground dc link of 640 MW capacity which carries the output from a 500 MW generating unit at the Kingsnorth (Kent) power station to the 275 kV/132 kV substations at Beddington and Willesden.

The Generating Board's transmission system is inter-connected with the systems of the South of Scotland Electricity Board and Electricité de France, the latter inter-connection via dc submarine cables across the English Channel operating at ± 100 kV and permitting power exchanges of 160 MW either way. A 2,000 MW h.v.d.c. cross-Channel reinforcement is under consideration. The voltage level below 275 kV is 132 kV, the original Grid; most of this network was transferred to the Area Electricity Boards on 1 April, 1969 and it is now their primary distribution system. Some distribution lines operate at 66 kV but the backbone of the distribution system is usually at 33 kV. Main feeders at this voltage load major substations where the supply is transformed down to 11 kV or 6 kV. For domestic and other small consumers the supply is further transformed down to the standard voltage of 415/240 volts. At the end of 1977 the total length of the Area Boards' distribution mains exceeded 580,000 circuit kilometres.

Rapid progress is being made with the installation of automatic reclosing circuit breakers on the distribution circuits to reduce interruptions from transient faults. Increased live-line working and the use of mobile generators is further reducing the need for planned interruptions. An overall continuity of supply of 99·98 per cent is being achieved. Automatic data transmission handling and recording is helping to cope with the growing complexity of the network and to reduce costs. Since 1948, distribution engineering costs per kWh sold have fallen by two-thirds in real terms.

Expenditure on research and development in 1976–77 exceeded £50 million, including £39 million on revenue account of which over 70 per cent was on improvements in generation, including efforts to reduce environmental effects of power stations.

The Electricity Council Research Centre at Capenhurst, Cheshire is carrying out intensive research into distribution problems and electricity utilization. A company, Chloride Silent Power Ltd, has been set up jointly with private industry to further development of the sodium sulphur battery for use in electric vehicles. Research into industrial applications of heat pumps is supported, as a way of increasing the effectiveness of energy use. Studies at the Centre's instrumented test houses make a valuable contribution towards improved energy management and conservation in the domestic sector.

Research into load characteristics provides data for pricing customers' demands as economically as possible. All national promotional work is carried out by the Marketing Department of the Electricity Council.

A significant factor during the period 1967 to 1977 has been a fall in manpower of over 67,000, i.e. of 30 per cent, whilst, sales have increased by 36 per cent.

Total net assets (i.e. after depreciation) employed in the supply industry in England and Wales at 31 March 1977 were £6,229 million. In 1976–7 the industry's total capital expenditure was £704 million.

The industry has provided a large proportion of its capital needs from internal resources, comprising profits after interest and depreciation charges; the rest comes from external borrowings by the Electricity Council on behalf of the industry. From nationalization to 1976–7 self-financing averaged 57 per cent of capital needs.

In March 1962 the industry agreed with the Government financial objectives for the five years to 1966–7. A gross return of 12 per cent on net capital employed was achieved compared with the target of 12·4 per cent. A later target for the five year period to 1973–4 was to earn a net return of 7 per cent on capital employed, but the need to restrict tariff increases as a contribution to counter-inflationary policies made the achievement of the target impossible. The Government paid compensation for this price limitation for the period 1970–1 to 1975–6.

Principal Results for 1976–7 (figures in brackets are for 1975–6). Total revenue, including income from contracting and sales of appliances £4,142 million (£3,495 million) of which £3,873 million (£3,255 million) was from the sale of electricity.

Profit £206·5 million (loss £8·5 million). Net return on average net assets 10·4 per cent (7·3 per cent)

Income from contracting and sales of appliances £245 million (£218 million) resulting in an operating profit on this account of £1·1 million (loss £0·9 million).

Sales of electricity: 191,960 million units to all consumers (1·3 per cent increase on previous year). Average price of electricity to all consumers 2·018p per unit (1·718p per unit).

Net capability of the CEGB's power stations at the end of the year 56,365 MW (58,677 MW).

Fuel consumed for all purposes in the CEGB's power stations 97 million tonnes of coal or coal equivalent—including 71 million tonnes of coal, 14 million tonnes coal equivalent of oil; 11 million tonnes coal equivalent of nuclear power.

Average thermal efficiency of the CEGB's steam power stations (excluding nuclear) 31·54 per cent.

Simultaneous maximum demand on the CEGB's system 42,110 MW (41,353 MW).

Employees at December 1977: 159,345 (162,003).

Following the reorganization of the electricity supply industry after the passing of the Electricity Act 1957 the statutory bodies comprising the electricity service in England and Wales are the Electricity Council, the Central Electricity Generating Board and the twelve Area Electricity Boards. The functions are described in general terms below.

The Electricity Council

This body has functioned from January 1958 as the central council for the supply industry in England and Wales for consultation on, and formulation of general policy; its main functions are to advise the Secretary of State for Energy on all matters affecting the supply industry, and to promote and assist the maintenance and development by the Central Electricity Generating Board and the Area Boards (known collectively as Electricity Boards) of an efficient, co-ordinated and economical system of electricity supply. The Council can also perform services for the Boards, and, in addition has certain specific functions, particularly in matters of finance, research and industrial relations.

The Central Electricity Generating Board

The Central Electricity Generating Board controls the operation and maintenance of power stations and the main transmission system and supply electricity in bulk to the twelve Area Electricity Boards in England and Wales. They are also responsible for the provision of new generating and transmission capacity including the siting and construction of new power stations and transmission lines. The Board's organization is made up of Headquarters and five Regions and two Development and Construction Divisions and a Research Division, all mainly self-contained.

Area Electricity Boards

Each of the twelve Area Electricity Boards acquires bulk supplies of electricity from the Generating Boards and is responsible for distribution networks and sales of electricity to its Area consumers. The Boards also undertake contracting work and appliance selling through their 980 shops.

Committee of Inquiry into the Structure of the Electricity Supply Industry in England and Wales

Following a re-examination of the supply industry's structure by the Plowden Committee the Government announced that legislation would be introduced in 1978 to create a new central body with overall responsibility for financial, commercial, engineering, research and industrial relations policies.

ELECTRICITY CONSUMERS' COUNCIL

Secretary: P. Holmes, 119 Marylebone Rd., London NW1 5PY

Represents electricity consumers at a national level in England and Wales.

REVIEW OF THE GAS INDUSTRY

The British Gas Corporation was established on 1 January 1973. British Gas explores for, produces, transmits, distributes and sells gas and sells and services gas appliances throughout Great Britain. Its twelve regions are responsible for day-to-day contacts with the 14·2 million gas customers.

In the year ending 31 March 1977, total gas sales rose to a new record of 13,837m therms, over 97 per cent of which was natural gas from the North Sea. Conversion of gas appliances to use natural gas was completed in England and Wales in 1976 and in Scotland in 1977.

Sales of gas to domestic customers were 6,183·3m therms; to industrial customers, 6,106·6m therms; and to commercial and public administration customers, 1,547·1m therms.

In the financial year 1976/77, British Gas had a turnover of £1,957·5m, and made a profit of £31·5m, compared with a turnover of £1,565·6m and a profit of £25·1m the previous year.

Total revenue from gas sales was £1,688·3m, an average revenue of 12·20p per therm, compared with £1,327·6m and 9·87p per therm the previous year.

British Gas had 99,926 employees on March 31 1977, a decrease from 101,662 a year earlier.

GOVERNMENT

SERVICE OF CATALOGUES AND INDEX CARDS

The service is intended to satisfy the varying requirements of users of Government Publications; some require to receive daily notification of issues; others are content to be advised once a week; some find their needs satisfied with a monthly list; others with a consolidated annual list; and many need lists according to subjects.

Daily List

Every day, except Saturdays, Sundays and public holidays, a list of publications issued is posted to subscribers. The List of Statutory Instruments prescribed under Section 3(1) of the Statutory Instruments Act, 1946, is published as part of the Daily List. This service is of value to all who must ascertain immediately what is being published by the Government from day to day.

The Daily List is also posted in weekly batches, and this cheaper arrangement will meet the needs of many subscribers.

Weekly List

A selection of government publications of interest to Local Authorities is compiled weekly and posted to subscribers.

Monthly Catalogue

The monthly catalogue includes a loose inset with short descriptions of important publications and is fully indexed. The catalogue is of special value to librarians, many of whom regard it as indispensable for Reference Libraries and for use in selecting material for permanent accessions.

Annual Catalogue

The annual catalogue comprises a fully indexed bibliography of all Government Publications issued in the year except Statutory Instruments. A consolidated index is issued every five years.

International Organizations

The publications of the United Nations, and those of its specialized agencies and of certain other International organizations, although not published by HM Stationery Office, are on sale at all Sale Offices and are included in the Daily List and are listed in a Supplement to the Annual Catalogue.

Statutory Instruments

Statutory Instruments are not included in the general Monthly or Annual Catalogues. Special monthly lists are published for January to May and July to November; a half-yearly list, covering the period January 1st to June 30th, and an annual list covering the whole year.

Index Cards

For those who wish to maintain a card catalogue of official publications, index cards, 5 inches by 3 inches carrying details of the number of pages and illustrations in addition to the information provided on the Daily List of Government Publications, can be supplied.

Sectional Lists

A catalogue of current non-parliamentary publications, with a selection of parliamentary publications, presented in separate lists according to the Government Departments sponsoring the publications listed. The series now comprises over sixty lists which are brought up-to-date periodically. Issue is free to applicants.

PRESS COUNCIL 410

Review by COLIN SLATER, JP, MIPR

Chairman, Local Government Group, Institute of Public Relations and County Information Officer, Nottinghamshire County Council

The reorganization of 1974, that watershed in the history of local government, had many results both direct and indirect and not least in the sphere of public relations. Encouraged by the "Bains Report" on management and structure in the new local authorities, many of the newly-created councils decided for the first time to establish a public relations unit which, in practice, more likely meant the appointment of one public relations officer with no professional assistance and only a small budget.

The second effect was a decision to close the Local Government Information Office which previously operated from London and served the various local authority associations and thus all local councils. Too much has elapsed for it to be appropriate for me to examine the wisdom of that decision, with which at the time most people tended to agree; I was one of them.

Taken together the two have had a quite remarkable effect. It is, I think, true to say that those councils which took the Bains advice to heart and adopted "an outgoing and positive attitude to the members of the community" now experience a situation in which the public is better informed about local affairs than ever before.

The ways in which this will have been achieved will have varied from council to council, but an essential element to all will have been the establishment and maintenance of good press relations; and this may be supplemented by publication of a council free newspaper, an annual report on council activity and in a variety of other ways.

But at the same time the national portrayal of local government has seldom been more damning, and with the division of local councils in so many local authority associations there is no effective voice or way of countering these. To draw an analogy with the trade union movement, can you tell me who is our Len Murray kind of figure who will put the local authority view as clearly and sharply as he puts the trade union position? So long as we lack that resource we lack a decisive piece of armour in presenting ourselves to the public.

And all this at a time when a whole series of allegations has been made against the honesty and integrity of local government members and officers. Who has not heard the stories from the North–East, or Lancashire or the West Midlands or West Yorkshire? Who, as a result, does not believe that the reputation of local government has been sullied and clouded in a way which undermines some people's confidence in us and impairs our credibility?

These factors sharpen the need for local government to be less inhibited in presenting to the public, forcefully and imaginatively, its considerable achievements. We allow our critics to command far too much attention at the centre of the stage. These critics have created the slogan that "local government reorganization has been a disaster" and local government should challenge them to prove that statement or shut up. They will not find it easy to furnish proof.

Put another way, there is no good public relations operation which, in the Bains phrase, is not outgoing and positive–and even dynamic. This is not to say it is the way in which all local authorities approach public relations or the advice which all public relations officers would give, and with that handful I would personally be in fundamental disagreement.

There is, however, evidence that in four short years since reorganization the public relations service in local government has come further than in the previous 36 years. (I pick the figures carefully; 1978 is the 40th anniversary of the creation of the Institute of Public Relations, and its founding fathers were from local government.)

We are stronger numerically, we are better equipped professionally and we can in various places point to positive achievements which best answer the oft-asked question: "What do you actually get out of public relations?" Given certain important developments over the next few years this picture will become increasingly healthy.

The Local Government Group of the Institute is greatly encouraged by the seriousness with which SOLACE regards public relations in local government. We wholly welcome the setting up by SOLACE of a Public Relations Panel comprising very senior chief executives and we have been glad to participate in discussions with them and to be included among the speakers at their annual conference. We look forward to developing closer working ties with SOLACE, not least so that the two bodies may examine carefully together the role and impact of politics on the public relations operation.

We have also been pleased to consider with them, in a preliminary way, the assistance which might be given to individual local authorities which seek to appoint a public relations officer. SOLACE members know that the Group will positively advise them on the appropriate salary level, job specification, advertising procedure and short-listing. We shall not be prepared actually to sit with an appointing committee because, whether justified or not, it could lead to a charge of "neopotism". (In passing, it is worth adding that the variation in salary levels between one authority and another is quite alarming!)

A second development which may be very significant is at a very early stage of discussion, but some of us are persuaded that it is worthwhile examining the setting up of a Public Services Division within the Institute of Public Relations. This would not in any major sense, I believe, affect the working of the Local Government Group but it would provide a forum, where now there is none, for public relations experts in the whole area of public work to be drawn together, including central government, the nationalized industries and the Health and Water Authorities.

These are factors which lie in our own hands. Others do not, except insofar as we are able to bring influence to bear, and here I am thinking of changes to the media. In the immediate future this, above all, will centre on the future of broadcasting in the United Kingdom. Local radio has had an enormous impact over the last decade, and this will accelerate as more and more stations are open dealing with purely local issues.

I work in an area served by two local stations, one BBC and one commercial, and I can only say to my colleagues and to councils which do not yet enjoy the benefits of local radio that they will hardly know what has hit them. Apart from the plethora of 'phone-in programmes, which produce numerous listeners' questions (grass-roots stuff, that) and demands for councillors and officers to sit on panels and subject themselves to examination, they consume new items at a speed which is almost frightening. Let the figures speak for themselves: in one recent week the two local stations here carried more than 30 news stories from the County Council alone, plus many others from district councils.

If you are likely to have a local radio station installed in the area where you are a public relations officer it is worth heeding these facts, recognising that many of your member and officer colleagues will need help in order to perform adequately in the new world of a radio studio, and asking what you can do to help them—which, in a phrase, is a very great deal for which I know they will be really grateful.

No other officer will be able to give this assistance. We make in this, and other respects, a unique contribution to the management and general well-being of local government. It is a contribution of which we need never be ashamed.

INSTITUTE OF PUBLIC RELATIONS

1 Great James St., London, WC1N 3DA (01-405 5505).

Director: J. Wild.

President: Henry L. James, Director General, Central Office of Information.

The Institute of Public Relations is the only organization in the United Kingdom devoted exclusively to the study and development of all aspects of public relations. It was founded in 1948 by a group of public relations officers from commerce, industry, central and local government, all of whom felt the need for an organization to represent the rapidly expanding profession in which they were engaged.

The Institute is by far the largest professional public relations organization in Europe. It is a member of the Centre European des Relational Publiques (CERP), a federation of Europe's 13 national public relations association, maintains a regular and active connection with many other overseas public relations associations, and draws associated members from 55 countries.

The Institute defines public relations practice as "the deliberate, planned and sustained effort to establish and maintain mutual understanding between an organization and its public".

The main objectives of the Institute are:

(a) To promote the development, recognition and understanding of public relations.

(b) To establish and prescribe standards of professional and ethical conduct and ensure the observance of such standards.

(c) To encourage the attainment of professional academic qualifications.

(d) To provide via meetings, conferences, seminars and printed material, information, discussion and comment on all aspects of the practice of public relations.

(e) To maintain two-way contact between the public relations profession in the UK and public relations practitioners throughout the world.

Within the Institute there is an active Local Government Group as well as two other vocational groups and eleven area groups.

LOCAL OMBUDSMEN

Three Commissions for Local Administration have been established to investigate complaints from members of the public about injustice caused by maladministration in local government. One for England and one for Wales under the Local Government Act 1974, and one for Scotland under the Local Government (Scotland) Act, 1975. Separate notes appear below for each of these three bodies.

Maladministration is not defined in the Acts and will be for Local Commissioners to decide whether it has occurred. But it refers for example to the way in which an authority's decision has been taken. Maladministration may be taken to cover administrative action (or inaction) based on or influenced by improper considerations or conduct. Arbitrariness, malice or bias, including unfair discrimination, are examples of improper considerations. Neglect, unjustifiable delay, incompetence, failure to observe relevant rules or procedures, failure to take relevant considerations into account, failure to establish or review procedures where there is a duty or obligation on a body to do so or the use of faulty systems are examples of improper conduct. The Commissioner has no power to question the merits of a decision taken without maladministration.

a. any county council;
b. any district borough council;
c. the Greater London Council and the Inner London Education Authority;
d. any London borough council;
e. the Common Council of the City of London;
f. the Council of the Isles of Scilly;
g. any joint board of local authorities, including the National Park boards;
h. any regional water authority;
i. any police authority, other than the Home Secretary (who is the police authority for the Metropolis).

This list includes all committees, members and officers of those authorities.

Parish councils are not open to investigation by a Local Commissioner, unless they are acting as agents for other local authorities.

The Local Commissioner will not investigate any complaint until it has been brought to the attention of the authority complained against, either by the person aggrieved (or his personal representative) or by a member of the authority on behalf of that person, and until the authority has had a reasonable time in which to reply to the complaint.

A complaint intended for reference to a Local Commissioner should be made in writing to a member of the authority complained against with a request that it should be sent to the Local Commissioner. It should state the action which it is alleged constitutes maladministration. If the member does not refer the complaint to the Local Commissioner, the person aggrieved may ask the Commissioner to accept his complaint direct. A COMPLAINT SHOULD NOT BE ADDRESSED DIRECTLY TO A LOCAL COMMISSIONER IN THE FIRST INSTANCE.

LOCAL COMMISSIONERS HAVE NO POWER TO INVESTIGATE COMPLAINTS RELATING TO ACTION TAKEN BEFORE 1 APRIL 1974. This was the day on which the new local authorities (outside London) took over from their predecessors and the water authorities came into existence. (The relevant date in Scotland is 16 May, 1975).

A complaint may be made by an individual, or by any body of persons (excluding a local authority, nationalized industry or other public body). Normally the complaint must be made by the person who claims to have suffered personal injustice, though exceptions may be made if that person has died or is for any reason unable to act for himself or herself.

Complaints must normally be made to a member within TWELVE MONTHS of the day when the matters complained of came to the notice of the aggrieved person, but a Local Commissioner has power to accept a complaint outside this time-limit if he considers that there are special circumstances which make it proper to do so.

COMMISSION FOR LOCAL ADMINISTRATION IN ENGLAND

Two Commissions for Local Administration—one for England and one for Wales—were established under the Local Government Act 1974 to investigate complaints from members of the public about injustice caused by maladministration in local government. The English Commission at present consists of three Local Commissioners, each of whom will investigate complaints arising in a particular area of the country, and the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration.

The names of the Local Commissioners and the local government areas and water authorities for which they are responsible are:

THE BARONESS SEROTA, Chairman of the Commission
Greater London, Surrey, Kent, East and West Sussex.
The Thames and Southern Water Authorities.

D. B. HARRISON, Vice-Chairman
Cheshire, Salop, Staffordshire, West Midlands, Hereford and Worcester, Warwickshire, Leicestershire, Northamptonshire, Cornwall (with Isles of Scilly), Devon, Somerset, Avon, Gloucestershire, Wiltshire, Dorset, Oxfordshire, Buckinghamshire, Bedfordshire, Hertfordshire, Essex, Berkshire, Hampshire and the Isle of Wight.
The Severn-Trent, Wessex and South West Water Authorities.

F. P. COOK
Northumberland, Cumbria, Durham, Tyne and Wear, Cleveland, Merseyside, Lancashire, Greater Manchester, North Yorkshire, West Yorkshire, South Yorkshire, Humberside, Derbyshire, Nottinghamshire, Lincolnshire, Cambridgeshire, Norfolk and Suffolk.
The North West, Northumbrian, Yorkshire and Anglian Water Authorities.

PROGRESS

In the year ended 31 March, 1978 the three English Local Commissioners received a total of 1,684 referred complaints of which 1,172 were, for various reasons, not acceptable for investigation. During the year 277 investigations were completed and reports issued and 154 investigations were in progress at the end of the year. Planning matters provided the highest proportion of complaints (about 34% of the total) followed by housing (23%) and education (6%).

Inquiries about the English Commission should be put to the Secretary—M. R. Hyde,. At 21 Queen Anne's Gate, London, SW1H 9BU (Telephone: 01-930 3333).

COMMISSION FOR LOCAL ADMINISTRATION IN WALES

Derwen House, Court Rd., Bridgend, CF31 1BN (Bridgend 61325/6).

Local Commissioner: D. W. Jones-Williams, OBE, MC.
Secretary: Hywel F. Jones, MA, IPFA.

The Commission for Local Administration in Wales was constituted by Section 23(1)(b) of the Local Government Act 1974, and consists of one Local Commissioner and the Parliamentary Commissioner, ex-officio.

The work of the Commission is concerned with complaints alleging maladministration by any of the 8 county councils, 37 district councils, 4 police authorities in Wales, the Land Authority for Wales and the Welsh National Water Development Authority. The jurisdiction of the Commission also extends to any joint board, the constituent authorities of which are all local authorities.

Under Paragraph 4(4) of Schedule 4 of the Local Government Act 1974, the Commission is required to ensure that staff are available to deal with complaints in the Welsh language. The Local Commissioner, the Secretary and an Investigator are all fluent in Welsh and the Commission is able therefore to comply with the statutory obligation.

The Commission has produced a bilingual phamphlet, "Your Local Ombudsman in Wales", which has been distributed to all authorities within the jurisdiction of the Commission, government departments, citizens' advice bureaux and various other bodies likely to be interested in the work of the Commission. All persons who enquire about the work of the Commission are given a copy of this bilingual pamphlet.

During the year the Local Commissioner and the staff of the Commission have given talks in English and Welsh to various interested bodies.

The arrangements whereby full reports are issued to the press appear to be working satisfactorily and, in general, the press and the broadcasting authorities have given them very good publicity.

The press has also, from time to time, referred to the work of the Local Commissioner in special articles.

Complaints continued to be received from all over Wales and by the end of the year formal complaints had been received against all the authorities within the jurisdiction of the Local Commissioner, with the exception of the four police authorities and the Land Authority for Wales.

Three quarters of the complaints submitted to the Local Commissioner during 1977–78 were received initially direct from members of the public. Complaints clearly outside the jurisdiction of the Local Commissioner were rejected, whilst the other complaints were returned to the complainant, with advice on the correct method of submitting a complaint. Only 36, or about one in four, of these complaints were subsequently submitted as formal complaints.

The Local Commissioner cannot answer enquiries from the press or public about specific cases. He will however, be ready to answer general enquiries about his jurisdiction, eg whether a particular type of action by a particular body is within his scope to investigate.

During 1977/78 the Local Commissioner received 243 complaints of which 187 were not acceptable for investigation. 44 reports were issued following the completion of investigations, 19 of which found maladministration. A report was also published on a withdrawn complaint.

Planning applications account for 30 per cent of the total formal complaints received during 1977/78 as in the previous years, whilst the proportion of housing complaints increased from 20 per cent to 24 per cent and highways complaints from 5 per cent to 12 per cent. Education complaints accounted for only 3 per cent of formal complaints compared with 12 per cent in 1976/77.

COMMISSION FOR LOCAL ADMINISTRATION IN SCOTLAND

Commissioner: R. Moore, CBE.
Secretary: K. Bratton.

The appointment of a Commissioner for Local Administration in Scotland was authorized by the Local Government (Scotland) Act 1975.

His duty is to investigate complaints from members of the public of injustice attributed to maladministration by any Regional, Islands or District Council in Scotland, any water development board or river purification board, any committee, joint committee or joint board whose members are appointed by local authorities, and in general any official or body which discharges any of the functions of a local authority. He is unable to entertain complaints about matters arising before 16 May 1975. The Act also excludes from his jurisdiction complaints concerning court proceedings, police activities, personnel matters, schools and colleges, commercial operations and contractual transactions.

The Commissioner produced a leaflet "Your Local Authority Ombudsman in Scotland" which was distributed to all authorities within his jurisdiction, government departments, citizens advice bureaux, academic institutions and other bodies who were considered to be interested in his work. A poster has been produced and displayed throughout Scotland.

During the year the Commissioner and senior members of his staff have given talks to interested groups. The Commissioner has spoken about his work on national radio.

During 1977/78 the Commissioner received 264 complaints. Of these 111 were referred by a member of an authority and a further 16 were accepted direct, the Commissioner being satisfied that a member had the opportunity to refer the complaint to him but had failed to do so. The pattern of last year was repeated, Housing (41%) and Planning (27%) being the main areas of complaint.

Since taking up office the Commissioner has received complaints against all the 9 Regional Councils in Scotland, 47 of the 53 District Councils and 2 of the 3 Islands Councils.

The Commissioner is unable to answer enquiries from the Press or public about specific cases. He will however answer general enquiries about his work.

The Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration is an independent statutory officer whose function is to investigate complaints of maladministration brought to his notice by members of the House of Commons on behalf of members of the public.

His powers of investigation extend to actions taken by central government departments in the exercise of their administrative functions, but not to policy decisions (which are the concern of the Government and can be questioned in Parliament). Certain administrative actions also outside his jurisdiction include matters affecting relations with other countries and the activities of British officials outside the United Kingdom.

In the performance of his duties, the Parliamentary Commissioner has access to all departmental papers and reports his findings to the member of Parliament who presented the case. The Parliamentary Commissioner reports annually to Parliament and may submit such other reports as he thinks fit. A select committee considers these reports.

HEALTH SERVICE COMMISSIONER

The offices of Health Service Commissioners for England, for Scotland and for Wales were set up with effect from 1 October 1973. The present holder of the three offices is Sir Idwal Pugh.

The Health Service Commissioners investigate complaints from members of the public that they have suffered injustice or hardship as a result of failure in a service provided by one of the health authorities, or of their failure to provide a service which should have been provided, or of maladministration involved in other actions taken by health authorities. Before the Commissioners can investigate, the complaint must have been brought to the attention of the authority concerned, and an adequate opportunity given to investigate it and reply. They do not deal with complaints for which statutory procedures for investigation already exist (e.g. those about general medical and dental practitioners, pharmacists and opticians, or with complaints against actions taken solely in the exercise of clinical judgement. They do not normally investigate complaints for which a person could seek a remedy in the courts but they have discretion to do so.

The Commissioners report annually and may submit such other reports as they think fit, to the respective Secretaries of State who lay the reports before each House of Parliament. The terms of reference of the

In 1974 the Municipal Group introduced to local government a most imaginative subscription scheme for Municipal Journal and Municipal Engineering.

The Service Fee Subscription Scheme, with its one order, one renewal date, one payment advantages, gives local authorities considerable financial savings but also allows members and principal officers to continue to have their own copies each week, posted individually to them no matter where they are situated.

Since the introduction of the scheme, the great majority of the Counties, Metropolitan Districts and larger District Councils have ordered the magazines on this basis and it has proved a most efficient method.

One of the lessons learnt from re-organisation in England was the importance of ensuring that all members, principal officers and their staffs were kept fully informed of what was happening not only in their own areas, but in local government generally. The Service Fee Subscription Scheme, apart from saving your authority money, was born to keep this objective alive.

Review by I. L. COOPER, FInstSWM
Director of Cleansing, City of Westminster

One encouraging feature in recent years has been the increasing awareness at all levels in society of the need to protect our environment and to achieve this objective the importance of efficient refuse collection and disposal and street cleansing services is no longer under estimated. In addition the fact that the stocks of raw materials are not infinite has highlighted the necessity of utilizing solid wastes either by re-cycling, effective land reclamation, or for treatment to provide an alternative source of energy.

Refuse Storage and Collection

The continually changing pattern of life style has a marked effect on refuse storage and collection. The fact that central heating has become the most common method of domestic heating and the growth of packaging has resulted in solid waste materials becoming much bulkier and less dense. A few years ago a cubic metre of domestic refuse weighed around 5 cwts whereas today it is little over 1 cwt. This has led, particularly in flats, office blocks, hotels and restaurants, to an increasing usage of large capacity on site containers and the use of on site compression machinery to reduce the volume of refuse prior to collection. An indication of the complexities of the situation is that at least one local authority now operates eight different systems of refuse storage and collection in order to provide satisfactory storage occupying minimum space on site and the most economical collection service.

At the time of writing no positive decision has been taken but there is every indication that those sections of the Control of Pollution Act 1974 dealing with refuse collection will be implemented in 1978. When these sections are implemented the difficulties in identifying and separating trade refuse and domestic refuse will be resolved. There will be three main categories of solid waste:

(1) Domestic—Arising from homes including certain waste from hospitals and institutions.
(2) Commercial—Solid waste arising from commercial premises including hotels and restaurants.
(3) Industrial Waste—Waste arising from industrial and manufacturing premises.

A local authority will have a duty to provide a service for the collection and disposal of all domestic and commercial refuse but it is required to make a charge for the collection and disposal of commercial refuse unless it considers it expedient not to do so. A local authority is now however required to provide a service to deal with industrial waste. The new situation is quite specific and does remove all the ambiguities of the past. However, especially in inner city areas it could in fact prove counter productive to the spirit of the Control of Pollution Act. Under the Public Health Act legislation where the nature of the refuse (i.e. domestic in character) was the criterion many urban authorities chose to make a generous interpretation and accepted that most shops and offices were producing refuse mainly domestic in character and therefore allowed a high proportion of their refuse output to be treated as such and therefore a rateborne charge. Under the Control of Pollution Act if the authority decides to charge for commercial refuse then the whole of the output from any commercial premises must be charged. Thus in inner cities where in consequence of refuse storage difficulties a daily or certainly twice or three times weekly service is common, commercial premises including hotels and restaurants will face very considerable increases in charges for the refuse collection service. This could result in some cases of indiscriminate dumping and in others the engagement of the less reputable private contractors who might offer a low cost service but resort to fly tipping in order to do so.

Another piece of legislation which is receiving increasing attention, and rightly so, is the Health and Safety at Work Act. The ramifications in relation to refuse collection are enormous bearing in mind that under the Act the place of work of a refuse collector is at one time during the working week almost every premise in the local authority's area and that almost all refuse collection vehicles are equipped with compression equipment which if not designed and used properly could be potentially dangerous. In consequence many managements in order to protect themselves have issued very detailed safety codes of practice but which could be used by unscrupulous employees to employ so many restrictive practices resulting in a level of productivity to render the service incompatible with the finances available. A great deal of effort will be necessary on the part of management and trade unions to ensure that the objectives of the Act are met fairly and sensibly.

Refuse Disposal

Waste Disposal Authorities have now completed site surveys, the necessary forerunners to the issuing of site licences. At the time of writing the sections of the Control of Pollution Act 1974 dealing with site licensing have not been implemented but it is anticipated that they will be during 1978. This will give the Disposal Authorities the teeth necessary to ensure high standards of waste disposal. There is no doubt that the private sector will be monitoring licence decisions with great care to ensure that there is no evidence of double standards i.e. the Disposal Authority setting a higher standard for the private sector than they do for themselves. It is right that they do so but I do not believe this will happen as Disposal Authorities are fully aware of their responsibilities and duty to set high standards by example.

The continuing financial climate plus the availability of land fill sites indicates that land reclamation will continue to be the dominant method of waste disposal.

Street Cleansing

The street cleansing service has truly been the 'Cinderella' in terms of local authority expenditure. It is generally the first to suffer cuts during times of financial restraint and last to have them restored when conditions improve. This situation may have made some sense in an insular society as it can be argued that not many votes depend upon the efficiency of the street cleansing service but it does not make sense in a country which increasingly looks to its tourism to earn foreign currency. Additionally unkempt streets and open spaces must have a depressant effect on the local population and people with little pride in their local surroundings are not likely to have a great feeling of national pride.

Increasingly the more enlightened local authorities are recognizing that modest increases in expenditure to deal with the litter problem can be amply repaid in making our country more attractive to our foreign visitors and an increased pride in their locality among residents and people working in the area.

Statistics continuously indicate that we live in an increasingly violent society with vandalism and hooliganism becoming an increasing problem. Accepting these facts it becomes obvious that in such conditions spending less in real terms than a few years ago is a policy which can only result in dirtier and less attractive towns and beauty spots, seriously jeopardizing our tourist industry and lowering the morale of inhabitants.

Re Cycling

The need to conserve raw materials has already been mentioned and while public awareness of this factor and thus the importance of re cycling is high much of the enthusiasm for re cycling is based on emotional reactions and tends to ignore the harsh economic factors.

At least the Government are becoming more realistic and specific in their re cycling policy. A few years ago when their Green Paper "War on Waste" was produced the current philosophy was one of suggesting that local authorities should be actively pursuing all sorts of re cycling projects and included indications of Government intentions regarding waste paper re cycling including Government financed stock support schemes to encourage market stability and thus encourage local authorities to commence and expand waste paper collections.

The situation has changed and at least now has a touch of realism. Government stated policy is that market forces must prevail in relation to re cycling activities. At present other than in the most unusual circumstances this means that the only material a local authority could re cycle is waste paper and even then very few local authorities can hope to do more than break even financially on waste paper re cycling. The number of local authorities re cycling waste paper is steadily falling and will continue to do so in a market situation where the price paid for waste paper remains stationary but local authority expenses increase in consequence of national inflation.

This situation is of course exactly in line with Government policy, and who are looking to the Voluntary Associations to provide future waste paper needs. The irony of the situation is that the paper industry is predicting that by 1979 there will be a shortage of waste paper of around 150 000 tonnes and which all sides of the industry agree can only come from local authority sources.

Despite therefore current Government policy of telling local authorities that they should only be in the re cycling business if it is profitable in a truly commercial sense, if past experience is any indication by late 1979 when there is a shortage of waste paper we will see another Government "War on Waste" with local authorities again the "Aunt Sally" for not actively pursuing waste paper re cycling.

INSTITUTE OF SOLID WASTES MANAGEMENT

28 Portland Pl, London, W1N 4DE (01-580 5324/5).

The Institute was founded in 1898 as a professional body concerned almost exclusively with local government waste management services. Over succeeding years it has progressivey attained an influential professional status yet still largely confined to the public sector.

The growing public concern for protection of the environment, the increasing pace of technical development and Government proposals for a new legislative framework for control and development of the waste management services led the Institute in 1973 to review its role. It was decided to change its name and to re-define its objectives to include for the first time the private sector.

> "The promotion of scientific, technical, and practical aspects of solid and semi-solid wastes management including the collection, treatment, utilization and disposal of domestic, street, commercial, trade, and industrial wastes for the safeguarding of the environment."

Since then the provisions of Part I of the Control of Pollution Act 1974 which provide the basis for legislative control in waste management in both the public and private sectors is being progressively implemented; the Department of the Environment is sponsoring considerable research and development and issuing continuing guidance on the technical, scientific and practical aspects of waste management.

These developments have affected waste management, identifying the considerable scope there is for integration and co-ordination of the scientific, technical, practical and educational aspects of waste management services in both the public and private sectors.

These developments indicate the absolute need for a strong professional body which can promote the objectives outlined above by providing an umbrella organization in which experts working in the various sectors of waste management can meet together, exchange views and provide expert guidance to all those concerned including Government

Solid Wastes Management Service

The Greater London Council is responsible for disposing of some 2·8 million tonnes of refuse a year collected by the London Boroughs and the City of London from the 620 square miles of Greater London and delivered direct by the public under the provisions of the Civic Amenities Act 1967. At the present time approximately 85% is disposed of under controlled tipping arrangements to reclaim worked-out mineral excavations or marsh land. The remainder is incinerated. The service employs some 440 operative staff. Of the total tonnage, approximately 560,000 tonnes, are conveyed to land reclamation sites by barges on the River Thames, 340,000 tonnes go direct to landfill sites in the Borough collection vehicles. 180,000 tonnes are rail borne to a contractor's landfill site and 1,700,000 tonnes are carried in bulk road transport vehicles operated by contractors or the Council.

The Edmonton incinerator plant handles some 400,000 tonnes of refuse a year, providing an income of over £1 m. from the sale of electricity.

The reclamation of derelict land by controlled tipping will continue as the major method of disposal. A major rail transfer station was opened in West London in 1977 from which wastes are taken to Oxfordshire. Two further rail stations are currently under construction for north-west and west London. All new transfer stations incorporate compaction equipment in conjunction with containers to obtain maximum payloads and clean handling.

REFUSE STATISTICS

The Municipal Year Book has repeated the feature in the 1978 edition of a country-wide survey of the refuse collection and disposal services provided by local authorities. Ninety per cent of our enquiry forms were returned and are summarized below. Thus the value of these statistics has been enhanced as the survey in 1978 covered seventy-five per cent only of the responsible local authorities.

In England County Councils are refuse disposal authorities and District Councils refuse collection authorities, except for those Districts that undertake disposal under agency arrangements.

In Wales, District Councils undertake both collection and disposal duties as do the Scottish Islands and District Councils and the Northern Ireland District Councils.

There's no reason why all civic vehicles shouldn't be as well built as his.

Our refuse collection vehicles are built by hand around our own purpose made chassis.

So they carry bigger payloads than comparative models, giving a substantial reduction in operating costs.

That's a very good reason for having Refuse Collectors similar to your First Citizen's vehicle.

NOTICE ANYTHING DIFFERENT?

Here's a clue: the photograph below depicts the business end of the Melford Precinct Suction Sweeper.

You've got it! There's no centre brush to lift the material into the hopper. Instead we use the suction principle as used on the large road sweepers.

This system has been proved over many years to be the most efficient method of sweeping. It is the only system capable of sweeping effectively whilst using the Melford Precinct's full manoeuvrability of a 3 metre turning circle or when operating on uneven surfaces.

This is just one of many very advanced features which are incorporated into the Melford Precinct Suction Sweeper.

We would be pleased to show you them all.

THE MOSELEY WHEEL WASHER RANGE

Are single or twin axle, self driven wheel washing devices which remove mud clay, stones and even impacted chalk from wheels and chassis before any vehicle leaves a site. The washing time is about thirty seconds, a very important money saving detail when installed at the exit of sites of any description.

In addition to the self driven model, William Moseley also manufacture power driven models used for recovery of valuable ores and minerals, the control of toxic waste and the cleaning of dead axle vehicles. All models are portable and can be moved from site to site, so spreading their cost over many contracts and a number of years.

The Washer is easily installed, requiring only a pit and a water supply, whilst a range of accessories are available for the more permanent installation at tips chemical and coal sites and transport depots etc.

Full operation and installation details are available upon request from

Secretary, Local Authorities Service Conditions Advisory Board

The current round of pay negotiations has clearly shown the importance, complexity and variety of collective bargaining in local government. As I write the settlement date of the last major local government group, APT & C, is still some three months away. However, it would seem, contrary to the pessimistic expectations of many people, that a third year of pay policy will be successful in restraining the level of increase in earnings in the economy as a whole. While there are some doubts about the level of some industrial settlements in the private sector there can be no doubt about local government's adherence, albeit with some difficulty, to the pay policy guidelines.

Local government has played a vital role in the success of the pay policy and hence the improvement in the nation's overall economic position. I said last year that the Board had made representations to central government that a third stage of pay policy was essential. While by no means all the Board's views were incorporated in the pay guidelines, the Board committed itself to the pay policy because it believed its success to be in the best interests of both local government and the nation.

The importance of local government cannot be measured solely in terms of the size of its labour force and pay bill, about 3 million people and £8000 million respectively in England and Wales; it goes far beyond local government. The Manual Workers settlement, covering over 1 million employees, is the first in the wage round and has historically been a pace setter for other manual agreements in the public sector including the National Health Services and government industrials. After protracted negotiations the staff side accepted the employers' offer which was within the 10 per cent pay guidelines. The fire brigades' negotiations were even more significant tests for the pay policy. The history of the negotiations has been widely reported. Nevertheless certain points deserve comment here without repeating all the details of the dispute.

Though the firemen took the dramatic action of staging a nine week national strike, contacts between the union and employers were never broken. The two sides had jointly sponsored a working group to compare the firemen's job with others; the group reported that they could find no specific analogue with the firemen and recommended the two sides to discuss rates of pay on the basis that "the most appropriate comparison is with the generality of jobs in the community". Thereafter, despite the union's decision to call a national strike, the two sides remained in touch, ultimately reaching an agreement on an immediate increase and on a pay formula to determine firemen's pay in the future. The continuing dialogue assisted the return to normal negotiations, in particular the fundamental and extremely complicated negotiations which are currently taking place on the reduced working week for the fire service.

Negotiations even though not always as dramatic as those in the fire service this year do not just start and finish with the annual pay negotiations, they are continuing processes absorbing the energies and skills of both sides. The fire brigades dispute above all showed that despite recourse to major industrial action that the established practices of joint negotiation finally provided an answer for the time being and a reasonable prospect that future settlements might be reached without recourse to industrial action or outside intervention. The outcome of the dispute was a vindication of the belief that Whitley procedures are sufficiently flexible to meet such extreme situations.

The agreement for an immediate increase and the pay formula for the future reflected the Board's policy of each negotiating group negotiating an agreement within pay policy guidelines but which met the specific requirements of the group. The recent teachers' negotiations centred on the complex question of salary drift as probably will the APT & C negotiations. The problems of calculation encountered and the industrial action taken by the teachers lead me to recall that I said last year the Board referred ministers to the present arrangements for the payment of scale increments. "These are permitted only if the total pay bill is not increased beyond the limits prescribed by the current policy, but this involves calculations so intricate as to be virtually impracticable. Increments should either be accepted within the pay policy or completely barred".

It is regrettable to have to report that the police negotiations were broken off unilaterally when the staff side of the Police Council (the negotiating body) declined to participate in proceedings and asked to be enabled to negotiate direct with the Home Secretary and his department. During the dispute an independent committee of inquiry chaired by Lord Edmund-Davies had been set up to enquire into police negotiating machinery in the light of the federation view that the Police Council was unsuited for the purpose. When agreement was reached on an increase from 1 September 1977 it was dependent on the decision to widen the scope of the Edmund-Davies inquiry to review police pay in the light of changes in workload and responsibilities since the matter was last investigated. It is to be hoped that by the time of the September 1978 negotiations, negotiations will have recommended in the established machinery, albeit possibly modified and the two sides will be able to negotiate an agreement in the spirit of Whitleyism which will be in the best interests of the whole police service.

So much for the importance of local government negotiations and the course some of them took. The role and activities of the Board should perhaps now be described in more detail.

Though there are more than 500 local authorities in the United Kingdom, it has long been accepted that it benefits both employing authorities and their employees that they should adhere to a common set of principles in determining pay and other conditions of employment flexible enough to meet the circumstances of authorities of differing dimensions and local requirements. These are drawn up by joint negotiating bodies representing local authorities and trade unions at national, provincial and local level.

The role of LACSAB is to service the employers' sides of negotiating bodies at national level, to provide them with specialist advice, and to set as collective spokesman in dealing with unions, the central government, and other bodies. The employers' sides are free tc make their own decisions: the Board and their officers advise, but their advice is not mandatory.

The decision to change the title of LACSAB's journal from News Summary to Local Government Manpower, though superficially of minor interest, was an indication of the broadening conception of the Board's functions which had become increasingly apparent. The Board has had to adapt to the changing circumstances and the requirements which are placed upon it. Flexibility and adaptability are two key attributes. New tasks have been undertaken which more than justify the new title.

Two instances may be mentioned. The continuing intervention of central government in local government negotiations through pay policies makes it necessary for local authorities to maintain close and continuous links with government departments and ministers. LACSAB has played an increasingly active role as spokesman for local government with the full cooperation of the national employers and Local Authority Associations.

Again, the strict control of public expenditure and particularly the call for closer control of staff numbers and a continuous check on them involved the Advisory Board in the exercise of collecting and collating statistics and passing the results back to individual authorities to help them in their own manpower management. The Board's secretariat are constantly engaged on collecting data about manpower numbers and costs so as to assess national pay bills and the cost of claims, offers and settlements.

Among the newer responsibilities undertaken by LACSAB and their staff may be mentioned advising authorities and publishing Handbooks and Advisory Bulletins on the mass of employment law placed on the statute book in the past few years; the preparation of comments on consultative documents issued by the government or by the Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service on topics such as disciplinary procedures, time off work for trade union purposes, or the nature and extent of information to be disclosed by employers to trade unions to aid them in negotiations.

Local government negotiating machinery includes the very important element of joint provincial councils composed of nominees of local authorities in their areas and serviced by a secretariat. The provincial councils provide an essential means of ensuring contact between individual authorities and national level. The provincial secretaries are in constant touch with the LACSAB headquarters and on major issues meetings of the provincial councils are held at which collective views are formed and communicated to the national negotiating committee or committees.

As to the future, it is no easier this year to predict the state of service conditions negotiations during the next pay round than it was last year. Whatever the circumstances may be, I am confident that the established Whitley procedues will be able to meet the challenge.

LOCAL AUTHORITIES' CONDITIONS OF SERVICE ADVISORY BOARD

The functions of the Board, established in 1948, are to co-ordinate the activities of the employers' sides of local government wage negotiating organizations, to provide a joint secretariat for those bodies, to maintain liaison with other employers, and to obtain and disseminate information on service conditions.

The Board consists of 28 representatives appointed by the associations of local authorities, the Greater London Council, the employers' sides of the first three negotiating bodies named below, the official side of the Police Council for the United Kingdom, the employers' side of the Fire Services National Council, the Burnham Primary and Secondary Committee, the Burnham Further Education Committee, the Scottish National Councils, and the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities.

The number of employees within the purview of this negotiating machinery is estimated at about 2.45 million.

Since the Board was established in 1948 there has been a continuous extension of its interests and in the number, responsibilities and authority of the negotiating bodies associated with it. Not only has the national determination of service conditions come to be accepted practice in all spheres, but other important duties have also been placed upon the joint negotiating bodies; the growth of national settlements has led to the use of national disputes machinery; the joint councils have created panels, meeting regularly throughout the year to determine disputes arising under joint agreements, relating either to individuals or to classes of workers. There is, too, an increasing tendency for disputes arising at provincial level to be referred to the national bodies for settlement.

The Board, through its secretariat, is available to give local authorities information and advice in all matters concerning their relations with their employees, and, in particular, advice relating to establishment problems, grading of all or of individual posts, and industrial relations generally; the local authorities have availed themselves freely of this service. Some have sought advice on arbitration matters, and in several instances the Board's secretariat has acted on behalf of the authority or been in attendance advising at the hearing.

The work of the Board has led to the development of close liaison with employers in other fields of industry. This has become a regular feature of the day-to-day work of the secretariat and provides a two-way channel, information being sought and views exchanged on both sides.

The Advisory Board's office is at 41 Belgrave Sq., London, SW1X 8NZ (01-235 9801) and its secretary is B. J. Rusbridge.

SALARIES AND WAGES IN LOCAL GOVERNMENT

The figures are the latest available at the time of going to press. The date shown for each category is that from which the rates quoted came into operation. For certain categories of local government employees separate rates apply respectively in England and Wales and in Scotland where no distinction is made in the following tables, common standards apply. For reasons of space, particulars are given only of the major groups.

NOTE: Information regarding new national agreements reached subsequent to the printing of this Section are, where possible, printed after lists of officers in Section 40.

The fulcrum point salary is to be determined by reference to population as for chief executives. This may then be adjusted upwards or downwards by not more than three increments in each case in the light of the actual duties and responsibilities of the post and the management structure adopted by the authority. A further adjustment of two additional increments may be made in the light of defined special factors but the total addition to the fulcrum point salary must not exceed four increments.

The NJC for Local Authorities APT & C Services have a similar agreement for Chief Officers within the scope of the NJC with the same range of fulcrum point salaries, but with differing criteria and no limit on the increments below the fulcrum point salary.

For all Chief Officers (including Passenger Transport Managers) and deputy chief officers within the scope of this Joint Negotiating Committee the salary scales calculated in accordance with the circular of 4th July, 1975 continue to be applicable. In addition to their salary as at 30th June, 1976, all officers shall receive a salary supplement as set out below.

NEW TOWNS

The salaries of chief officers of new town development corporations and similarly graded staff of the Commission for New Towns are allied to those of Civil Service assistant secretaries. From 1st April 1975 the range was £8,650 to £11,000. The salaries of other administrative, professional, technical and clerical staff are broadly similar to those of the corresponding grades in local government and were adjusted from 1st July 1975.

From 1st July 1976 the £312 per annum supplement was added. The settlement is within the terms of the Government's pay policy as set out in the White Paper "The Attack on Inflation" (Cmnd. 6151). It provides for the payment of a supplement of £312 per annum to all staff except that:

(a) pro-rata supplements shall be paid to part-time staff based on normal hours of work;
(b) officers aged 16 years shall be paid a supplement of £210 per annum, rising to £261 per annum with effect from their 17th birthday;
(c) officers aged 17 years shall be paid a supplement of £261 per annum, rising to £312 per annum with effect from their 18th birthday;
(d) the supplement shall not be paid to officers whose remuneration is £8,500 or more per annum or, if such payment would increase the officer's rate of remuneration beyond £8,500 per annum, such part only shall be paid as will increase his rate of remuneration to that amount.

The supplement is to be excluded for the computation of overtime, bonus and other premium payments.

From 1st July 1977 the 5% earnings supplement was added. The settlement is within the terms of the government's pay policy as set out in the White Paper "The Attack on Inflation—The Second Year" (Cmnd. 6507). It provides for the payment of a supplement of 5% to all staff, subject to a weekly minimum of £2.50 (£10.87 monthly) and a maximum of £4 (£17.39 monthly).

The supplement calculated on gross pay including all taxable allowances, does not count for overtime, bonus and other premium payments. Pro rata minimum and maximum supplements are paid to part-time staff based on normal hours of work.

Review by W. B. HARBERT, AAPSW

Director of Social Services, Avon C.C. and President of the Association of Directors of Social Services

Standstill budgets in recent years have enabled Social Services departments to consolidate their position, to focus management thinking on quality rather than quantity and to ensure improved co-operation with related services such as education, housing and health. Many authorities have embarked on extensive programmes of in-service training and the proportion of qualified staff is steadily rising. Nevertheless, departments have faced severe pressures on services in respect of every client group and there is growing recognition that public expectations of services cannot be met without a substantial increase in expenditure.

Considerable changes have been taking place in field work services during recent years. The proportion of qualified social workers has now risen to about 50%, more thought is being given to the appointment and deployment of social work assistants and there has been an unmistakable shift towards specialization. Social work has received a bad Press particularly in relation to non-accidental injury to children and this has galvanized many departments into developing positive policies for regulating the size of social workers case loads and for improving methods of supervision. The overall effect of these changes has been to strengthen the management of services and to enable social workers to be more responsive to needs.

There has been a growing reluctance on the part of social workers to provide out-of hours cover in addition to their basic working week. Standby and callout duties have always been unpopular; financial rewards are minimal and do not offer adequate recompense for the disruption to family life that is inherent in these duties. Industrial action has been gathering momentum and many authorities have found it necessary to appoint specialist teams of officers at enhanced rates for out-of-hours work.
